Actually you're a little high... actually, I only have two of the existing SkyWave 2879AB amplifiers left in stock. There are no plans to build any more of the existing design since the new SkyWave 2879ABTC design will be released right on schedule... sometime in mid-October.

1 Switched side of mic element. Open on receive

2 Common side of mic element. Pin 2 is also connected via switch to pin 4 on receive. Pin 2 is otherwise connected to pin 3 on transmit

3 No connection on receive, connected to pin 2 on transmit

4 Connected to pin 2 on receive. No connection on transmit there is nobody that has never broken the law SC but in justice were involved he would have nothing to worry but in truth Politics is in the mix and he MIGHT have reason worry (truth has little to do with politics afterall)

The crickets will always be be with us, since you keep running away from the questions, Alexa. C'mon, now: "What KGB?".

My name isn't relevant to you answering, coward.

"However, these criteria, admirable as they are, are insufficient for a liberatory postmodern science: they liberate human beings from the tyranny of 'absolute truth' and 'objective reality', but not necessarily from the tyranny of other human beings. In Andrew

Ross' words, we need a science 'that will be publicly answerable and of some service to progressive interests.'" -- A.D.S.

And how are these letters "Using Quantum Potential Weaponry To Spy On CIA Posting On The Internet" (To quote your subject line), Alexa?

You're babbling incoherently again, I see.

Two years ago, the court rejected Bush's claim that he had authority to seize and detain terrorism suspects and indefinitely deny them access to courts or lawyers. In this follow-up case, the justices focused solely on the issue of trials for some of the men.

The vote was split 5-3, with moderate Justice Anthony M. Kennedy joining the court's liberal members in most of the ruling against the Bush administration. Chief Justice John Roberts, named to the lead the court last September by Bush, was sidelined in the case because as an appeals court judge he had backed the government over Hamdan.

Thursday's ruling overturned that decision.

995. Let's say I break into your house

Recently large demonstrations have taken place across the country protesting the fact that Congress is finally addressing the issue of illegal immigration. Certain people are angry that the US might protect its own borders, might make it harder to sneak into this country and, once here, to stay indefinitely. Let me see if I correctly understand the thinking behind these protests.

Let's say I break into your house. Let's say that when you discover me in your house, you insist that I leave. But I say, "I've made all the beds and washed the dishes and did the laundry and swept the floors; I've done all the things you don't like to do. I'm hard-working and honest (except for when I broke into your house).

According to the protesters, not only must you let me stay, you must add me to your family's insurance plan, educate my kids, and provide other benefits to me and to my family (my husband will do your yard work because he too is hard-working and honest, except for that breaking in part).
If you try to call the police or force me out, I will call my friends who will picket your house carrying signs that proclaim my right to be there.

It's only fair, after all, because you have a nicer house than I do, and I'm just trying to better myself. I'm hard-working and honest, um, except for well, you know.

And what a deal it is for me!! I live in your house, contributing only a fraction of the cost of my keep, and there is nothing you can do about it without being accused of selfishness, prejudice and being an anti-housebreaker. Oh yeah, and I want you to learn my language so you can communicate with me

Why can't people see how ridiculous this is?! Only in America..
Say by to your future Social Security funds.

Interesting analogy. Unfortunately, neither of the political parties look at illegal immigration from such a viewpoint.... one of morality and justice. It's really about economics and political power.

The Democrats want to legalize illegal immigrants because Latinos tend to vote overwhelmingly for Democrats. Granting easy citizenship to immigrants would result in a major swing of political power (as well as a significant increase in tax revenue). But it will not stop -illegal- immigration because these people are jumping the border for jobs, not freedom or citizenship, and employers are required to pay US citizens at least the minimum wage. Also remember that the largest industry in the US is agriculture. So we would have both legal -and- illegal immigrants.

The Republicans actually -want- immigrants -- they just don't want to grant them citizenship. Not only does that prevent them from voting, but also prevents them from being paid any minimum wage, thus insuring that there is an ample supply of cheap labor in the US (hence the proposed "guest worker" program). This will eventually drop the wages of -all- blue-collar workers in the US, citizen or not, because of job competition between citizens and guest workers. But, of course, guest workers will still have to pay taxes.

So whether your martini is shaken or stirred, it will still get you drunk. Don't like the choices? Vote independent.

Good post Frank though I'd like to add that Bush is courting the Latino & Black vote with his choices of Rice, Gonzalez and less recently Powell. With that its still the rich white male society that makes the decisions that really matter sorry to say.

Some on this board wouldn't be too interested in seeing that or anything remotely like it.
Flash flood warning up for here which sucks as its gonna kill the vineyards which kills the tourists. Dont like the upislanders but they help keep this place rural in a round about way.

I'm not too happy to see it either actually, that's why I titled it Friday boner kill. :)

Well hell that blows for youin's. Hopefully you won't actually flood and be able to shrug it off as another false alarm. It's been drizzling for two days in a row over here. Mid-next week's high temps are only forecast for the 50's. The seasons are changing big time now. I kinda like it.

temps are changing, bass are running, i'll be fishing. took off three days this week to fish but the riptides were running which ruined any surfcasting.

Well, Bush isn't the president because he's smart. The real wealth and power are held by the people in the shadows behind him. Just like Reagan, he's the charismatic false-front that was used to install the current power brokers. He was selected, based on his race and gender, by the same power brokers that selected Powell, Rice, Gonzalez, and a few others (including a female SCOTUS candidate). It's all a political dog-and-pony show.

Want to know who holds the -real- power in government? Follow the money.

Yeah well we have to take the bad with the good I suppose. I bake my back outside during the growing season so this comes as a nice reprieve over here..year after year after year. Glad to hear the fishing prospects are improving inland. The pan-fish are fired up here now, crappie and perch.

No arguement from me on that. Independant party(s) are too weak to form any opposition and if they did become strong enough they would be assimilated by special interest groups. Aint democracy grand?

>No arguement from me on that. Independant party(s) are too weak to form >any opposition........

I'm not talking an "independent party" because there isn't such a thing. Personally, I have to side with Ben Franklin and say that political parties should be illegal. After all, some of the most infamous dictators rose to power as a member of a political party within an apparently legitimate and democratic form of government:

From http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Dictators:

"Modern dictators have usually come to power in times of emergency.
Frequently they have seized power by coup, but some, most notably Benito Mussolini in Italy and Adolf Hitler in Germany, achieved office by legal means and once in power gradually eroded constitutional restraints."

Sounds a lot like what Bush is doing, huh?

1029. Dinner at Aarons (some will remember this)

(Knock at the door) Aaron opens door wearing his skimpiest thong underwear

Aaron: Hi Sparky! How are you!

Sparky: I'm good Aaron. Is dinner ready?

Aaron: Almost. In the meantime, you can snack on me, but we need to hurry before George gets here.

Sparky:(screaming) Aaron! Will you shut up with the advances! I already told you I've started to like women now! Now leave me alone!

Aaron: OK, OK! I just thought we could be like the old days again.

Sparky: No, I'm really going to stick it out this time.

Aaron: (sniffling) Ok Sparky, have it your way. I'll respect your wishes.

Sparky: Where's George? Do we have to wait for him to eat?

Aaron: Yes, he's bringing the salad.

Sparky: OK. Got any snacks?

Aaron: I think so, let me check.

(knock at the door)Aaron answers the door.

Aaron:(exclaiming) George! My God! What happened to you?

George:(crying) I was just out minding my own business, following this little girl, and all the sudden, wham! Her Dad must have seen me and punched me. I had just asked if she wanted some candy too. I think I could have had her. Then the Dad pulled out of the window of my Pacer, and beat me some more. I think he dislocated my shoulder too.

Sparky: Can we eat now?

Aaron: Sparky, can't you see George is hurt? Go get one of the steaks for George's black eyes. And while you're in the kitchen Sparky, get some ice for his broken nose and busted lip too.

Sparky: OK, but I ain't eating the steak that you use on George's eyes!

Aaron: OK, whatever!

(Sparky spends fully 5 minutes trying to figure out which steak is the smallest, so he can have the biggest.then finally he returns)

Aaron: God Sparky! Why did you take a bite out of it? It's raw, for Christ's sake!

Sparky:(unintelligible mumbling caused by mouthful of raw steak)

Aaron:(grabs steak from Sparky and applies it to George's eyes) There now George. Is that better? Aaron knows how to make you feel better, doesn't he?

George: Yes Aaron, it's much better now. Thanks, you know I bruise easily.

Aaron: Hey Sparky, light the grill.

Sparky: Hey, those steaks ain't half bad raw! Do we really need to cook them?

Aaron: My God Sparky! Sometimes you act like a Neanderthal! Light the damn grill!

(Sparky goes out back, turns on the gas, clicks the igniter repeatedly, nothing happens. Goes back inside for matches and returns)

Aaron:(just as Sparky lights the match) NO! STOP!

(loud explosion)

Sparky: (screaming) I'm on fire! Somebody help me!

(Sparky runs back through the house with his beard on fire, screaming for help.
Aaron and George race behind him with teacups filled with water)

Finally, Aaron and George manage to catch Sparky and beat out the fire in Sparky's beard with the teacups.

Sparky: Thanks guys! That was close! I saw my life flash before my eyes.

Aaron: No prob Sparky. You know we love you.

George: Speak for yourself, Aaron! Faggot!

Sparky: Can we eat now?

George: Well, we could if you hadn't blown up the grill!

Aaron: It's OK Sparky. We'll just grill the steaks on the stove.

Sparky: I don't wanna wait! I'm getting dizzy. My cholesterol must have dropped below 300.

George: Here, drink this.

Sparky: What is it?

George: Bacon drippings. It will bring the cholesterol level back up in your blood.

Sparky:(drinks greedily) Burp! Thanks George.

George: No problem. Hey Aaron, you still have that "Little Girls Gone Wild" video?

Aaron: I think so.check over there in the gay porn by the VCR.

George: Faggot! (looks for the tape)

Sparky: I'm hungry! Let's eat.

Aaron: Just hang on a minute. Let me get these damn steaks cooked. (throws the steaks in the pan)

George: (tearing his eyes off the video) Sparky, get the salad and dressing ready, will ya? I'm busy now.

Sparky: OK, George. (Sparky sets the table)

Aaron: How do you guys like your steaks?

Sparky: Raw is fine with me.

George: (rubbing his crotch while watching the little girl video) I don't care.
Yeah, raw is fine with me too.

Aaron: (mumbles) Damn weirdo's.

Aaron: (grease splatters on Aaron's hairless chest) Ouch!

George: Aaron, do you mind if I take this video home with me?

Aaron: Sure, take it. You know I don't like females.

George: (under his breath) Faggot!

Sparky: Can we eat now?

Aaron: Yep! Steaks are done. (Aaron places them on the table)

Sparky: I'm first George! That's my steak!

George: Whatever Sparky! Hell, I'm just gonna leave now. (grabs the video and heads for the door)

Aaron: Where you going, George?

George: Um.uh.I'm not really hungry now. I think I'll just watch this tape at home.

Sparky: Good! Gimme his steak.

Aaron: OK George, see ya later.

George: Bye

Scene: Much later in the evening after George has gone home to watch his kiddie porn, we return to find Aaron and Sparky enmeshed in each other's arms.

Aaron: Sparky, I knew you would come around.

Sparky: Well Aaron, I kind of feel guilty.almost as if I'm slipping back into my old self. I've really tried to kick this man habit, but I can't seem to stop having feelings for you.

Aaron: Well Sparky, I always knew we were meant for each other.

Sparky: I only ask one thing of you, Aaron.

Aaron: What might that be, Sparky?

Sparky: All I ask is that you don't breath a word of this encounter to George.

Aaron: Fair enough. I know he's a bit of a bigot.

Sparky: Yes he is, but he's still my only real friend. You know, I can't count the times that he's tried to save me when I've gotten in over my head on the newsgroup.

Aaron: I know Sparky, and he's done the same for me. I really love him, but I can't let him know that.

Sparky: So, we're sworn to secrecy, right Aaron?

Aaron: Absolutely! Remember, we did take the AKC pledge.

Sparky:(chuckles quietly)

Sparky: (tentatively) OK Aaron, I'm all yours.

Scene: Fade to black.

Scene: Much later in the evening after George has gone home to watch his kiddy porn, we return to find Aaron and Sparky enmeshed in each other's arms.

Aaron: Sparky, I knew you would come around.

Scene: Fade to black.

Scene: Sparky and Aaron sitting in bed smoking Virginia Slims

Sparky: Aaron, why is it I love you so much? I've tried to get over you, but I just can't.

Aaron: Well, I really don't know. I feel the same about you, although I've never tried to get over you. I never stopped loving you. I knew you would one day return. If you love something, set it free. If it returns, it was meant to be. If it doesn't, it was not yours to begin with.

Sparky: Truer words were never spoken, Aaron. I guess I'm like a butterfly.

Aaron: (chuckles girlishly for a bit)

Sparky: Oh shit Aaron! What are we going to do about George? There is just no way he will accept us having a Gay relationship.

Aaron: Well, I guess we'll just have to keep him in the dark about it. He's pretty much a moron, and I doubt he'll suspect us. Just keep it low key.

Sparky: I guess so.although we'll have to be careful when we overnight at each other's places. We need to make sure we don't leave our vehicles in front of the house. Better yet, I can clean some of the food crates out of the garage and you can park in there.

Aaron: That'll work. Yeah, we do need to very careful with George.you know as well as I do that he's prone to drive the streets at all hours of the night looking for young girls.

Sparky: (sigh) Yeah.

Aaron: Well Sparky, I think I'm gonna jump in the shower, wanna join me? I gotta get back to bustin those Keyclowns chops!

Sparky: Nah Aaron. I think I'll just grab something to eat while you shower.
I'm all worn out now.

Aaron: (grinning)Have it your way.it's your loss.

Sparky:(blows him a kiss)

Scene: Fade to black

Well, I am looking at the picture.... We i nEurope use metal film resistors now almost exclusively I think, not carbon? Maybe it is just the color coding.
It is quite easy to make a partlist from the photo, many things are obvious if you look up 2SC2829 application notes....
I would expect some thermistor for temp compensation, he is so proud of,
do not see it.

I just did some googling,. yes I like FETS, http://www.ibelings.com/n4ip/mrf157.html 1kW, with micro processor control
http://www.k0gkd.com/ssamp.html 600 W with fan

But for his first amp ;-), not bad!

It's not his first amp..... more like his fifth or sixth. He's been using this forum to spam his junk for years. Go back through the archives and you will see discussions about the cheap, diode-biased, class-C hacks he has tried to pass off as a "linear" amps. He even went so far to defend the designs by saying that "Linearity is not 'required' for AM...."; invoking the flywheel effect when there was no flywheel (tank) in the design; declaring that a 179 degree conduction angle did not introduce any significant distortion, irrespective of the low input impedance of the transistors pushing the conduction angle closer to 120-150 degrees..... and a bunch of other technical voodoo, hocus-pocus and nonsense. And all the time claiming to be a professional engineer while dismissing (yet later incorporating) most any constructive criticism.

The only thing the Professor has professed here is fraud.

The temperature compensation is accomplished with a bipolar transistor mounted to the sink near the RF devices. You can see it in the photos. Since this transistor is also silicon, it tracks almost perfectly with the RF devices... and with a little extra circuitry (that is voltage regulated)... can hold the bias very stable over a wide temperature range.

Nah, I'm watching the west coast hurricanes to see if we are going to be able to head down to Cabo this year. Who cares about Bass or Trout when you can catch a 30 to 6o lbs Tuna or Wahoo.
Oh yeah, I would run to if I was a Bass living back east lol!!!!!!!!!

Yes, that is a known technique, was already wondering what that transistor was for.
Why do you start a new subject line?, It should start with Re: (as you _do_

Let's put it this way, Brian: Ampheads don't care if their signal is clean or not, just BIG and LOUD. They don't care about biasing or linearity or thermal protection.... on the contrary, most of them actually -brag- when they blow a pill or smoke a resistor. In other words, you are building your product for the wrong market! Since you obviously failed your business courses, criticism of your designs was intended to encourage you to pursue either an amateur license or a professional career in electronics engineering. You have made big strides in your electronics education in the past few years, but you are still clinging to the notion of making easy money from illegal amps. And because of that your "business" has stalled.

Get a -real- job, go back to school, learn all the things about electronics and marketing that you -should- have learned before you started this venture, then apply that education in a way that will let you achieve your financial goals.

And -that-, dear Brian, is MY design.

most that it does fit are antiques. Yeah, big demand for you! ROTFLMMFAO!!!

Will your amp be type accepted in the future? Any patent on it or can Overwhelmingly Democrat? At least not in Dade County Florida recently.

That may have been a fact prior to 2000. The hispanic vote is nearly split in half.

The agricultural insustry has recently lost immagrint worker to the construction industry as they are paying on average about $5 an hour more.

Perot had the money to fund a major portion of his own campaign. Still the rules for a 3rd party are really stacked against a 3rd party from gaining any significant ground.

In fact the system is so static that for someone new to get elected on a national level they either have to resign or die in office.

Something like 95% of all incumbents win reelection. Once in, itis hard to get them out.

I was wondering when someone would mention this. I do seem to remember a clause in part 95 and/or in 97 that talks about the manufacture of amplifiers in the range of 25 to 50 MHz. I guess I must go back and review these to regulatory documents and determine if the FCC has recended some previous rules.

I must say the amp does look pretty with all that solder mask and sild screen. I can agree that it does make it look professional. Most amps
I have seen have been without solder mask and silk screen.

I can't see why one would do that. The solder mask and silk screen has to be a significant cost adder. I would think that one would not go to that expense for such low production levels. Besides tin plate over 2 oz copper is significant for amplifiers. That is 2 oz copper on the boards I hope?

Since he has published pictures and specifications along with offering the amp for sale, he has probably passed the the date for which he can apply for US patents. There are specific rules and dates for when patents have to be applied for prior to release for sale.

Perot was independent when he ran for president. He formed his party after the election. Regardless, Jesse Ventura won the Governorship of Minnesota under Perot's party, and Perot managed to get about 10% of the presidential votes. What did the two big parties do? They whined a lot. And ever since then they have been working the courts (yes, the same courts that they are accusing of having "activist" judges that are "legislating from the bench") to supress any and all independent and third-party candidates.

All the more reason to vote for candidates that are not backed by the two major parties.

They have not. A licensed ham can manufacture one per year that operates without modification in this bandwidth (26-30Mhz). Real commercial amp manufacturers require proof of license before they will divulge the mod procedures to make one operate on 10 meters, or sell the kit to make it operate there.

Hello All:

Who remembers the Sonic Cushion, a 47 light bulb wired in series with a speaker, and a low ohm pot. Mounted in a small square plastic box.

This circuit used the 47 light bulbs variable element resistance vs variable current, as a sound cushion for SSB. Works prett good.

I have one wired in and think I have it right!?!?!?!?

Any web sites on this?

Light bulbs have been used for years for compression in line amps and preamps, and have even been used as regulators in some older tube-type signal generators. But I've never seen one on a speaker except as a dummy load. Your circuit probably combines both functions. Try looking at compression circuits on epanorama.net.

Hello TE:

During the 70's when a lot more SSB activity was on the CB Band, like 16 LSB, (27.155 Mc) and the big rig guys could slide down to 27.150 or even 27.145 with there ham rigs, or modified cb radios. And a bunch of CB Radio Clubs sprang up. It was great!.

The poor design of the CB radios had a problem when the Squelch was set to remove the background noise, then a strong SSB station would come blasting in actually hurt your ears, you couldn't hear the far away SSB stations, as you needed to turn up the Volume to hear them, hoping a near by strong SSB station didn't come in blasting you out of your chair. The AGC in the receiver was at fault.

The Sonic Cushion would allow the far away stations, and not so loud stations, and Loud Stations to have closer audio levels going to the speaker. So that you are not constantly adjusting the Volume Control up and down. It was a real problem.

There where trick audio buffer amplifiers out there and they worked quit well. But you had to be with a group or the in crowd to have access to one of these constant Volume Buffer Amplifiers.

So many of these Sonic Cushions where sold at CB Breaks, and even CB Stores. It is pretty clever. It uses the variable resistance of a GE 47 light bulb element as the audio cushion.

The audio from the radio is feed across the end terminals a 25 ohm, 2 or 3 watt Pot. The ground and wiper is then feed to the GE 47 Light Bulb and speaker. The GE 47 Light Bulb is in series with the speaker coil.

The Radio Volume is turned up to say half way or even more. The Sonic Cushion is then adjusted to allow a nice comfortable listening level. The light bulb lights to the radios audio output, and of course brighter for loud SSB stations, which the light bulb has more resistance when more current is flowing thru it, and less resistance when a lower current is flowing thru it, then leveling the audio voltage feed to the speaker.

I have a Heil DSP External Speaker, connected to a Icom Pro 746 Radio, and it could use a slight degree of audio leveling, or cushioning. For SSB and CW. Its a big help when the beam gets turned around and different stations come crashing in.

Hello TE:

Yep I sure do.

Not only do they need a good tracking AGC, but a variable audio level control that would adjust the audio levels from all stations the same or at least with in a few dB of each other. A Automatic Level Amplifier can't be to hard to run down off the net.

The Sonic Cushion does a very good job with all this. Worth the parts and time to experiment with. With the rigs DSP (Digital Signal Processing) Noise Reduction, digital filters, attenuator, and nose blanker, the addition of a sonic cushion will also help, I think.

By being able to rotate the beam away from atmospheric noise and unwanted stations is also a big help. The use of the beams rejection and rigs attenuator and filters, its amazing what unwanted stations signals can be put in the noise. Even loud and strong local signals!

The Moonraker 4 has a 45 dB null 110 degree's off the front of the beam, by turning the beam null to the unwanted signals direction will drop em like fly's.

Wrong. I have a very low opinion of "ampheads". I have absolutely nothing against CBers since I happen to be one myself. There are lots of decent CBers out there and in the group.

Actually the provison is up to 5 units per year I believe. I should have differentiated between amature self contruction and that of comercial manufacture. My fault there.

If you say so. I find silkscreening a luxury that in no way affects quality. Solder mask is good for high density boards to help in minimize solder shorts during reflow. Your board is not that high a dense board.

I have for auction an HR2510 amateur radio for auction. eBAY will not allow me to list the radio but I am selling the radio with the accessories. Who would pay that much for the accessories alone?

This radio includes a brand new Microphone

I am including the cost of shipping in the Buy it now price.

I have attached some pictures and the ebay URL. You can email me at rkling at comcast.net. If for some reason the URL below does not work just search for HR2510 or item 290030852293.

Really? Why? I see at least a couple of HR2600s listed, one which clearly states it has the 2510 chipset in it. What does EBay say?

Something about FCC type acceptance, the 2600 must be type accepted.

You're right... the silk screen has nothing to do with quality. It mainly is an aid during construction. It also has benefits during any repair procedures... to quickly locate components of interest. The mask is also a nice feature during construction to avoid soldering issues. I don't scrimp on these things... they are well worth the few dollars per board in the long run. They also show potential customers that I'm serious about making a premium product... just like boards you might find in high-end commercial and consumer electronics.

Ham transmitters are not required to be type accepted (amplifiers are).
I thought that radio was a ham rig. Guess its a CB rig, which does require FCC certification.

You can't sell it under CBs. You have to sell it under ham radio. There is not a damn thing they can do about it.

Not at all. It used to be called RF Concepts. They've been around for years, and I've seen a few of their amps built by others. Yours is nothing new,

You can give your car a $1500 paint job, mount some 20" spinners, install a 12-speaker system with 500 watt subs, etc, etc; but no matter how much you dress it up it's still going to be an AMC Gremlin.

Nah, someone must have seen the picture showing 27.185 channel 19 and complained to ebay .
People that have nothing better to do than to play ebay police. You should have stated it as a 10 meter only radio, which IS type accepted AND displayed 28.300 or another HAM frequency.

I appologize for my earlier reply to the original poster questioning that this rig could be denied an EBay listing. A bit of further research shows me that EBay is entirely within their rights. Why they have overlooked the other similar listings is probably just that there are too many listings for them to catch everything.

A very clear source of information on the subject can be found at:

Hi Jay , yeah I remeber those as an automatic volume control. Boy that was back in the 60's. I know I can date it back to between probably 67 and 69 when I first heard of it because I used one on my old Hallicrafter. The Halicrafter had AVC but this worked better for keeping you from getting blastedd by a strong signal that suddenly appeared when you had everything cranked up to hear a weak signal. Bulb would have to be in series and resistor in paralell because the bulbs resistance goes up whenever more current flows through it. If it works it must be right.. That is to say I dont remember either but I do remember it using two bulbs and the model I built was to be used with headphones. You had to crank the volume on the radio way up and then use a control on the box to adjust it to listenng level.

Ok I found something that is just opposite what you wanted, I dont do ascii drawings so I will have to discribe it to you.
Imagine a bridge circuit made of two #47 bulbs and two 5 ohms resistors. They are wired so the resistors dont connet to each other and the bulbs dont connect to each other but the bulbs do connect to the resistors. Input is through a pair of opposite corners of the bridge and output is through the other pair of opposite corners. At first I thought that you could reverse the position of the resistors and diodes to get what you wanted but after describing it I realized you would still have exactly the same circuit. Regardless, if that's what he's doing then at least he's making an honest and honorable living. The same can't be said for someone who illegally manufactures and sells CB amps, using advertising gimmicks

If that's true (which I seriously doubt) then great -- the more people who are suckered into buying your amps, the more likely that one of them will be an FCC agent.

The feedback you get in this newsgroup tends to prove otherwise. And the fact that you continue spamming the group to sell your amps is indicative of your lackluster sales.

Hello Jimmie D:

Ok good deal, yeah thats what I was talking about.

My Sonic Cushion only used one light bulb, but that was for a old Johnson 350, 2 channel SSB only transistorized radio I used back in the 60's and 70's.

Yes you needed to turn up the volume, then turn up the pot, and it worked quit well.

I will have to try the two GE 47 bulbs and 5 ohm resistors and see what happens.

Another thing we use to do was install two diodes cross polarized across the speaker terminals to soften the blast from a old high voltage tube rig that, sent a blast of voltage when the radio was unkeyed. Like a General Radiotelephone Super MC-11A.

Thanks for the reply, Ah the memeories.

Not at all. Do -YOU- even know the purpose of an ALC circuit? All real (read not junk built in your garage here) amplifiers have them, as do all real amateur radios built in the last 10-15 years. There is a reason for them, but I suspect you don't have a clue what it is for. Your market is not amateur radio operators. Don't even attempt to fool yourself into believing it is. Even the QRP Yaesu FT-817 ND has an ALC circuit, although no legally manufactured commercial amplifiers are allowed to be driven at 5 watt power levels. You can homebrew your own, but you cannot buy a homebrew splatterbox built in a garage (yours).

If, and I emphasize -if- here, you have sold any amps to amateur operators, they must be fucking moron types, or so hobbled by physical challenges that they cannot build their own amps.

And another thing Griffey, those who live in glass houses should not throw stones. If you wish to continue this little online and EBay endeavor, I suggest you blend back into the woodwork like all the other illegal amp builders. There is a reason they are not here flaming people. They have a little common sense.

Can someone point me to a site that will list the CB frequencies for countries in Europe.

For example, I know the UK and EU CEPT frequencies but I would like to know what frequencies Germany, Italy, Poland etc... use for their CB.

I have tried to Google for the info but I draw a blank (maybe my search criteria is wrong :))

Cheers!

No pissing and moaning. The AKC APPROVES the distribution of ROTFL!!! He claims to be technically proficient enough to design and build a "premium" amplifier with "quality that is unmatched by any other builder". But when spamming his wares he can't handle a simple sig file or spell checker? If he lacks the attention to detail needed to correctly spell the name of his own company in his 'advertising' (which is even worse because it was part of the link to his site), just how good can his amps possibly be?

Who's going to get the amp with the wrong resistor or capacitor because he didn't 'spell-check' his work?

I guess you never missed a key when typing, huh? That's quite an accomplishment. Now, if you could just build an amp that worked... LOL

Don't worry about it, Wavy. It's way too much trouble to check (two vast posting histories to pore through to find what I remember seeing years ago), and nothing is gained if I'm right but a flamewar that could last for several months. I only mentioned it because I didn't realise it was a major point of contention...Pointless flamewars about this sort of thing bore me to tears, so you'll excuse me, hmmm? You can be teh victor.

I have designed and built more stuff than you can possibly imagine. I made some of it public on my website (when I had a website), and it was then subject to criticism, just like your amp is now. But I addressed the issues instead of attacking the critics with logical fallacies.

Now, do you -really- want me to design and build an amp? Before you decide, know that all design material will be publically available including schematic, board art, parts list & sources, construction tips, and even manufacturing specifications. That means anyone with more resources than you (i.e, more monthly income than your welfare check) can either build their own or hack the design for production.
Are you sure you can handle the competition?

So you have no amplifier... that's all I wanted to know.

I have designed and built plenty of amps, some that could work on the CB, and a couple specifically for the CB. But that doesn't answer my question: Do you want me to design an amp or not?

indeed the floks like Wisemen and Slow code Heil and Robeson inheritied the ARS from people of some vision and and have slowly had it pried out of their hands.

they have failed to adapt and change with the time and thus lostthe the place of the ARS in techinical inovation (wether that can be regained I don't know) the have lost control of the ARS now. sadly the Nocoders have not manged to fully grab control either

I don't know. You were pretty snippy with me in the beginning. And I want to ride this out a little while and see how much mileage I can 1172. Amp Design Concept -- Preliminary

Enough of that cheap one-board crap..... this amp is MODULAR!

Modular design allows easy repair and modification, as well as ease of construction and interchangeability between different amps. It also allows seperation of functions both electronically and physically. The modules include:

* Input module. Includes variable attenuator and dummy load which provides adjustment of input power without 'tweaking' anything inside the radio.

* Control module. Board that controls keying, bias & cooling fan.

* Sensor module. Board with circuits that take measurements from various locations throughout the amp and sends them to a meter. Meter function selection can be by rotory switch or by LCD display simply by swapping the board (module). Meter functions may include:

- RF input power, Fwd
- RF input power, Ref (for matching amp input to radio output)
- Base current
- Emitter voltage, (RMS)
- Emitter voltage, (peak)
- Emitter current
- RF output power, Fwd (RMS)
- RF output power, Fwd (Peak)
- RF output power, Fwd (Peak & hold)
- RF output power, Ref
- AF input (Ext. mod. function, AM only, see below)
- DC supply voltage, amp
- DC supply voltage, radio
- DC supply current, amp
- DC supply current, radio

* Power Amplifier Module. The module will consist of the amplifier circuit, heat sink and cooling fan, constructed inside an enclosed sub-chassis designed for forced-air cooling. Flying in the face of convention, the power amplifier circuit will -not- be mounted on a PC board. Instead, the components will be chassis-wired with heavy-guage copper, except for the transistors which will be wired with strips of copper sheet having rounded edges and corners. This allows easy repair and modification, as well as more secure and robust connections. Circuit will be an ultra-linear, broadband, AB push-pull design (details at a later date).

* Output module. Includes matching network and output connector, the type of which depends on the desired output method: balanced or unbalanced. The reason is that an unbalanced output is fine for mobile amps where the amp is mounted to an adequate RF ground, but that is rarely the case with base amps. So an option is provided for balanced output; the line can then be run to a point where a good RF ground can be found (e.g, a ground rod right outside the window) where it is coupled to a coax with a balun, or simply run balanced right to the antenna. The user now has these choices and they are built right into the amp!

* Power supply module (optional). Power transistors that are designed for higher voltage are more linear and -much- more reliable than those designed to operate on 12-14 volts. This switching power supply bumps up the voltage to 28 or 50 VDC and allows the use of such transistors.

Additional features:

* An external modulation function can be included, allowing the amp to function as a Class C modulator. Audio input is via a terminal strip on the back and fed from a common 8-ohm audio amplifier. The base bias is then adjusted (with a screwdriver through a hole in front panel) to Class C operation for higher efficiency. This works only in AM mode. There is no provision for audio filtering, so hi-fi (wideband) AM is possible if desired.

* Connections for remote operation:
- Key ground
- Key on ground
- Key on high (>=+5VDC)
- Key function select 1 (amp in/out)
- Key function select 2 (key auto/manual)
- Key function select 3 (AM/SSB)

I am open to any comments or suggestions, provided they are limited in scope to the design concept and desired features.

Yes, what are you going on about? Are you talking about an amp that exists, something you would like to see or something you want. You have just quoted a load of nonsense.

This is a project to design and build an amp. Once the preliminary design is complete it will be built, tested and refined. All final design parameters will be released for public use. Feel free to contribute.

Modular design has its benefits but it also has at least two disadvantages.

1. Initial cost

2. Problematic connections/connectors between high current modules.

Good point. And the final product costs will also be somewhat higher than single-board designs. But that extra expense may be offset when considering the product's usable lifetime. IOW, single-board designs are so cheap they are frequently considered to be 'disposable', while the sevicable lifetime of modular designs are limited only by the availability of parts. I'll have to see if there's enough info available to do an objective cost-benefit analysis.

>2. Problematic connections/connectors between high current modules.

Connectors are a necessity, but they are only problematic if you make them problematic. And since I haven't specified what connectors will be used and where, don't you think you are jumping the gun a bit?

No PCB = no cracked traces, copper seperation, no burnt boards, better heat dissipation, more efficient conductors, etc, etc. Let's face it:
replace the power transistors more than twice on a PCB and your board (and therfore your amp) is garbage. Not only that, but it also allows the flexibility to use transistors of different physical sizes and styles; i.e, the amp can be upgraded or retrofit as desired.

The intent is to drive this from a stock CB, but if you want scale it up then it's an easy design modification to the input module. I can include that as an option in the design. However, know that if FET's are used for power transistors then most of your 25/100 watt drive would be wasted.

Are FET's the most economical transistors, or are are there other choices for a 10 meter portable amp? The high drive would make it a bit more legal too, wouldn't it? (dunno, just curious)

Come to think of it, that power wouldn't be wasted at all. I just remembered a neat little power splitter circuit I designed a few years ago; using that I can tap off a signal for the amp and the rest can be rectified, filtered, and fed back into the power supply. So nothing is wasted except in conversion.

Bipolars are better for higher drive, but the more efficient setup would be an FET amp with a low-power exciter.

Does the 25 watt -in- requirement make it anymore legal, or no? (I really don't know)

A ham could probably confirm this, but I think the minimum is 50 watts input (with a license, of course..... without one it's no more legal than having 5 watts input). Regarding -compliance- with the law, just follow the leadership example set by our president and Congress.

Well yeah a guy is supposed to know CW to transmit voice on 10 meters...of course. (I thought it was 25w or maybe they've up'd it since then?)

Right, and a legal one would be a whole lot easier to advertise so the bottom line should be better. (just throwing my two cents in fwiw)

1191. Help with Grant President CB

I just inherited a Uniden? President Grant CB with SSB from my father who just died.
I have tried a "Google" search for a owner's manual and have come up empty.

My main problem is that the radio powers up OK but the meter, meter light's, and channel read-out all do not work.
When it is installed in my truck all I hear is static, same in SSB Hi and Low, almost normal for where I live, North Central Wisconsin, near Eagle River.

So anyway does anyone know of a GOOD, HONEST repair shop in maybe Wausau, Green Bay or even Milwaukee.
Or for that matter anywhere in the US?
Any one know where I could find a manual? I did check the Uniden web site but found nothing there either.

Or does anyone know what could be wrong with the meter, lights and etc?
My step mother said it worked a month ago just before my dad died, but she knows nothing about it.
There are 2 small switches on the side both soldered to same "MB 8719"? chip.
I know one is for extra SSB channels but I have no clue as to what the other one does.
One switch was broken it was a SPST/Center off, I did not install the correct switch when I fixed it I put in a normal on/off switch.
Could this have anything to do with the meter/lights not working?

Thanks for the help
Klumze

There is no such thing as GOOD, HONEST in the cb world. That's one of them epoxy morons. It would be cheaper to purchase a new unit than take to on of the dumb know-nothing clucks with a golden screwdriver.

OK, I'll accept that. I just had recollections of seeing them both buddying up with the Plagiarism Trio (Kluck, Duck, and Mousy), in past years. "The memory cheats", I guess...

I'm one of the trio (assume), and state solemnly that they are full of shit and flattering themselves. Where is this plagiarism?????
I'm more creative than ten of them in stretch latex.
I can show you picture theft, but you can't show me plagiarism.
Ooooeee baby... look: I stole some Usenet moron's moronic poem.
I'm really cool.

We are all saints in hiding.

Poetry is this /condensed/ literary form that is on the fringe (at least at the level of one poem) of copyright law. Phrases, names, titles, even quotations, aren't copyrightable. (although plotlines translated to movies -- are, seems.) Heck, IANAL... (married to one for 5 years)

Law is a crapshoot.

Is the haiku:

a perfect world found in these two stones

- david r

...copyrightable on its own????

Does it really amount to a quotation? Probably not.
Not a 5-7-5 haiku, but probably deemed a poem...

Maybe... but more legal /chest/ if David formally copyrighted it with various governments.
(more than one, depending...)

He (david r) explicitly gave me (email) permission to reproduce it on coffee mugs and various novelties without attribution.

How valid is his permission if I actually made any money?

I think he doesn't like me -- now -- and might like to recind.

Can he?

I know fool well I can extract phrases from poets to my hearts content... Famous, public domain, current, etc... to use in various publishing formats. Phrases aren't c/o etc...

Actually, my next software project is to code the creation of movies using porn and poetry.

MS Word macros can run Windows Movie Maker

The website will contain multiple sections for various famous poetic works merged into movies with processed Usenet Porn. Sections for my favorite prominant poets with links to buy their chapbooks at Amazon.

You're losin' it... no PCB at RF frequencies means wires and uncontrolled inductances / resonances all over the place causing instabilities... resulting in oscillations. Why don't you think any commercial amps are built your way.

How do you think amps and transmitters were built before the PCB was invented? In fact, how do you think most broadcast transmitters (many of which are still in use today) were built? By mounting a 4CX5000 on a PCB? Why do you think the old chassis-wired Heathkits command a much higher price than the later versions with more features but built with PC boards? And did you know that UHF transmitters also existed long before PC boards, were also constructed with point-to-point wiring, and worked without the problems you claim are inevitable.... on HF?

I can cite dozens of examples of power equipment, both audio and radio, that have histories of failure due to the use of PC boards instead of hard wiring. I think Peavey is about the worst offender in that department, in my own personal experience.

So you can fabricate any unfounded fear-tactic you like, the fact is that PC boards (including the newer epoxy boards) just aren't adequate for any high-power applications, let alone RF power applications. And point-to-point wiring is a time-tested method that only seems to cause problems for those who need a computer to tell them how to route the wiring.

That's because I don't make cheap, disposable crap. Never have, never will. But the use of FET's is at the discretion of the builder. The amp can be built with either FET's or bipolars. No other modifications are necessary, just a variation in the initial alignment.

Meter not working, could just be due to the settings of one or more of the switches on the front, Might be set to measure SWR, or CALibrate, instead of S/RF. Lights? Can't help with that at the moment...

Eagle River? Google says 69.9 miles to the west of me... Interesting...

Try out channel 19. Most likely this is where you will hear someone.
Trying it in the early morning hours. You should hear, if nothing else, truck drivers yacking away. Also, try Lower Side Band between channels 35 and 40.

There used to be a CB shop in Green Bay, Believe it is/was called Mike's CB
Shop? Haven't a clue if he's still in business, or if he's an honest shop/person.

What you have is a channel expansion. This isn't just for SSB, it expands the channels in any mode, Either SSB, and AM. Both switches are used for the channel expansion. Depending on where each one is set, you will get different bands of frequencies. This could also be another reason why you aren't hearing anybody on the radio. If you have a second CB, hook it up, no antenna needed. Set both radios to a common channel somewhere in the middle 15 to 25. Transmit on the Washington, and see if you hear anything on the other CB. If not, try a different combination with the switches, until you can hear the transmission on the other radio.

Unless the switch that was bad had wires soldered to all three terminals, you should be OK with the one you replaced it with.

Well, not exactly, I had in the long ago past a nice 40MHz army transceiver, toobes!!! (called '32set' IIRC) 40 MHz FM full of toobes and no PCB anywhere.
My own 500W linear PEP with toobe had no PCB either.
If you go to a real shortwave station, 10kW and up, they use big plumbing, big toobes sometimes... (these days transistors too in modules OK).
PCB (an as already mentioned by somebody): the thickness of PCB traces becomes a BIG issue especially if you run 1kW at 12V, a few milli-ohm will give you big i^2 x R losses.
So copper strip is better anyways, lower current, and higher voltages, FETS, means lower losses, you will need the switch-mode to get the higher voltage.
Switch-mode design 50V many amps is an art in itself, I have done switchmode design for a company, it will take you study and time, and likely a few transistor failures.

Soldering copper strips to these transistors will require you to support these with proper spacers, so as not to mechanically load the transistors too much.
Else vibrations will rip the connections right of over time.

I like Franks idea, it is a lot like this one:
http://www.ibelings.com/n4ip/mrf157.html
I looked up the price of those FETS, 475$ each :-)
But I also found a pair on offer for less then 60$, was already gone however.
http://www.sphere.bc.ca/test/rf-semis.html
other interesting stuff there too:-)

In my school days I used to sell Motorola parts..... to finance my hobby.

So, anyways, long before the kids had PeeSeeBees the big boys were using copper [wiring], and it did not [always] oscillate.
And in the old toobe times the voltages were more 'electrifying' too, mine ran on 1kV, some used much higher voltage power supplies, dangerous these big capacitors.
So the Telstar amp is just a small toy..... compared to what was done already in and just after WW2.

But do not let that put you off, it looks like a nice amp.
And Frank will still have to build his ;-)

BTW you Americans have 110V, I had some BUZ44A (IIRC) MOSFETS that can do 500V DC, these oscillated (unwanted) around 20MHz, one could just plug it in for a base station.... No voltage converter needed, not even a transformer.
Not sure if something like BUZ44A can be used as an amp.... at 27MHz.
http://www.datasheetarchive.com/datasheet.php?article=1048164 probably to much input capacitance 1600 pF.....

But looking around for a nice FET may be worth it.

What???????????????

When did this change???????????????

I believe if you reread the FCC requirements you will find that an amtuer can build his own without type accpetance. Commercially manufactured equiptment does need type accpetance.

Actually there is rather little to give any meaningful type of criticism of your product from a picture. Criticism from just aspecification sheet is rather meaningless to critique. Even reported data can be suspicious as there is no legitimate means of verification. If a design review were to really be conducted then at minimum a schematic would be needed to fully do any meaningful criticism. Then that schematic has been mentioned as "proprietary" so that concludes any hope of seeing it until further time as it is made public.

Okay, let's clear some things up, here... You seem to be arguing some point with which I (and I can only assume our readers) am completely and totally unfamiliar. You seem to be making a point that the issue of the poetry that being "plagiarized" is important enough to merit lengthy discussion. I am merely stating that the "Russell B" (our Russell B) in question is not the person you (or perhaps not even you, but someone) thought he was. Russell B

Please, friend. If we're going to argue, can we please start arguing the same issue? Thanks. You've been most helpful.

An attenuator on the input is nice. I am not sure a variable one is needed. By variable a multistep attenuator with four to six different values of attenuation would be a sufficient. A capability to switch the input drive to a internal du mmy load would nice luxury item but not necessary.

Man talk about monitoring circuits. Nice thing to have on a high tier amp. In reality most of these are great for development and early testing. Actual production would cause product cost to sky rocket.

Redundant circuitry since most modern tranceivers todday have some form a SWR bridge incorparated into the transmitter. Would be more needed if the run of coax from the transceiver to the amp were rather long.

AIr dielectric striplines are nice for the power transistors. They do introduce some memchanical issues. Great if you are in the 2KW or more output range. In the 100 to 250 watt range 2 ounce copper laminate would be quite sufficient. If varying dielectric constants are an issue then a use of teflon laminate would be preferable over that of FR4/FR5 laminates. Even alumina ceramics would offer a more stable dielectrtic for the striplines.

Most of the low level, low current components do not require "dead bug" style mounting. Laminates will do nicely. If you really want to go whole hog on the striplines then why not take the copper strips and either silver or gold plate them. Word of caution on gold over copper.
Nickel is not a good conductor of RF. Nickel is usually plated onto copper to give gold a hard surface to plate to. Plating gold directly onto copper requires a much thicker plating so that the copper will not leach through the gold.

Man after designing such a high tier amp, you adjust the bias through a panel hole with a screwdriver? Will you supply the gold plated screwdriver? I can understand why no band limiting filter designed in since most CBers would bypass that anyway. Th en again, ,a hightier amp as this would be nice to include it to show CBers what a nice thing to hear band limited audio on the desired channel and not 20 channels away.

Below about 1 KW, PCBs are adequate. In the 10 to 20KW range forget laminates. You would have to plate at least 3 ounce if not 4 ounce copper. Beisdes most laminates will have tremendous problems with RF currents at these power levels. AIr dielectric or even ceramics provide a better solution.

Also I believe Frank never mentioned the actual power out of his design.

The FCC does not actually place a power limitation on the drive.
Instead the specifiy the maximum gain of the amp at 15dB. So with 2KW output that would correspond to about 60 watt drive.

Prefer FETs even with their cost. They suffer less from thermal runaway as bipolar designes do. Bias network is easier to design.

Major disadvantage to FETS are the inputs are very static sensitive.
SO some means of ESD protection is needed that wont h inder RF performance.

His modular design will allow for bias network to change versus technology. Input/output impedances for bipolar and FETS do not differ that much for equal power out and drive conditions. FETS do tend to be slightly higher though. Also his output module should be adjustable enough to compensate for these variances.

But what about B+ requirements... power FETs are usually 28V or higher... while the bipolar allows for mobile use at much lower voltages. The FETs are also cost prohibitive as far as I'm concerned.

I tried digging around the FCC website for their certification process on

Meter not working, could just be due to the settings of one or more of the switches on the front, Might be set to measure SWR, or CALibrate, instead of S/RF. Lights? Can't help with that at the moment...

Try out channel 19. Most likely this is where you will hear someone.
Trying it in the early morning hours. You should hear, if nothing else,
and 40.

There used to be a CB shop in Green Bay, Believe it is/was called Mike's CB
Shop? Haven't a clue if he's still in business, or if he's an honest shop/person.

> Or does anyone know what could be wrong with the meter, lights and etc?

See above for meter, rest, don't know. Possible meter light is burned out.

What you have is a channel expansion. This isn't just for SSB, it expands the channels in any mode, Either SSB, and AM. Both switches are used for the channel expansion. Depending on where each one is set, you will get different bands of frequencies. This could also be another reason why you aren't hearing anybody on the radio. If you have a second CB, hook it up, no antenna needed. Set both radios to a common channel somewhere in the middle 15 to 25. Transmit on the Washington, and see if you hear anything on the other CB. If not, try a different combination with the switches, until you can hear the transmission on the other radio.

Unless the switch that was bad had wires soldered to all three terminals, you should be OK with the one you replaced it with.

Thank you for your help! I have another CB and will try what you suggested when I get a chance, maybe this weekend.
Mike's CB Sales and Service is still listed in the current GB phone book it's on Military Rd. Being as my exwife and daughters now all live in GB that may be the place to go....

There are two reasons for a variable attenuator. First, it allows the user to adjust the input power to achieve the best output power for the transistors being used. Second, the circuit is physically smaller than a stepped attenuator. The dummy load can also be external if the driver is more than a few watts.

The idea here is to show all the possibilities, not necessarily to include all of them. Regardless, a sensor module could be built that -does- include all of them. And the rest of the amp will be designed with numerous test points that can easily be tapped for use by the sensor module, or just used for occasional service and calibration. There is one major advantage of having lots of measurements available at the front panel: it provides an opportunity for non-technical users to learn more about the internal operation of the amp, and therefore the best way to use it. So it could be a great educational tool for a classroom, or maybe even a ham.

Aint teflon great? It's almost too easy to drill a small hole in the strip and mount a teflon standoff. Heck of a lot easier than trying to design a board around the mounting feet. And strips allow a mechanical connection to the flags that's better than filling the gap between the flag and trace with solder.

> Great if you are in the 2KW or more >output range. In the 100 to 250 watt range 2 ounce copper laminate

True, if you expect the transistors to never be replaced. But that's not the reality with CB amps. The owners like to swap transistors for more power. Either that, or they overdrive the transistors and blow them up. Replacing them tears up the board, which is why it's hard to find an old single-board amp with good traces. Point-to-point wiring eliminates this problem because both the transistors -and- the strips can be replaced. The servicable life of the amp is almost indefinite irrespective of the amount of work done to it.

> If you really want to

Because it wouldn't last, and that's contrary to the concept behind the amp.

Gold plating onto copper or brass is best done on top of a layer or two of silver. You can verify this with a call to your local trombone repair shop.

It's not "high tier" at all. It's just moving the technology forward about 20 years or so (with 20-30 years of catch-up still to go). The boards are single-layer and can be fabricated at home with that cool laser-printer transfer stuff, the individual components are common and inexpensive (except maybe the power transistors), and the construction is both simple and flexible. The only major expense (other than the power transistors) is the labor. Just hire a few illegals and you have yourself a business! Or build it yourself with all the gold-plated frills and LCD sensor array if you want. Or build it one module at a time. Or buy the basic model and modify the modules as needed. It's all up to the builder. Yet despite all the possible variations, the basic design remains constant. That's the great part about a modular design.

It will cost much more than you can afford on your budget, Brian. But if you -really- want one just wait a few years and maybe they'll start showing up at garage sales and thrift shops..... ok, probably not.
But you can dream, right?

Having read all the replies in here,I am just wondering if youre in the USA or Canada?and well,what kind a price r u lookin for the rig!
Any receiver can receive any frequency,if the read out was ch 19,who cares,I am sure ebay does not get into technical terms of everything thats listed,geeee it would cost them millions of dollars to have observers lookin at millions of items.Why don't u relist it and discribe it as a ham rig!reply in here and I'll get it

I /presume/ the purpose of poasting here is to be read, but the Repeatable -- Not only am I making the final design public, the entire process is going to be public domain. You, OTOH, won't even release your schematic for fear of constructive criticism.

Reliable -- In case you haven't been paying attention, the fundamental concept of the design is longevity. These amps are going to be around and working long after you and your amps are dead and buried.

Profitable -- I have saved the best for last. The -best- thing about a modular design is that it is perfectly LEGAL!!!. I can manufacture and market the chassis and modules independently under the premise that no component, in and of itself, constitutes an amplifier. The only way the government can touch this is if they outlaw every aspect of hobby electronics and the sale of each and every component, which we all know isn't going to happen (unless Bush declares a national emergency right after the 2008 election, refuses to give up his office, and installs a Republican dictatorship). There isn't one business-person on the planet that wouldn't invest in a business that can open up an entire market that was previously illegal. That, my friend, is called "profitable".

But you go ahead and continue your work on your diminutive little amp, knowing that your market is limited in both scope and time. Feel free to waste your time on a product that will soon be without a market.
The only thing you have going for you is the price.... but then again, have you done any market research lately? Do you know what people will pay for a decent amp? Probably not. But I have.

So now that the cat's out of the bag, how hard are you going to fight this? Or would you rather buy into it and make a shitload of money?

Feel free to email me with your answer.

Have you thought about putting a photo resistor in paralell with or replacing your resistor, light from the bulb wuold casue the resistance to decrease this should make the circuit more responsive. Its been a long time since I played with photoressitors so I dont remember what kind of resistance range they have. If they get low enough this could work pretty decent.

I never thought that trying to do this on an 8 ohm circuit was such a great idea. Doing it at sayy 100 ohms might be better using a lower wattage bulb than the #47. Even at 8 ohms I thought a 3 volt flashlight bulb may do better.

I never tried these ideas though because I took another route building my own select-o-ject and incorporating an AVC circuit into it.

I was just double checking my microphone wiring data against other sites, and I noticed your Shogun wiring is different.

To check, I took a look at the user manual for that radio and Astatic's microphone wiring data - both give the same wiring as for the Lincoln. Where did you get your information, is there a chance of error or could there be different versions?

Regards,

Peter.

Hello Jimmie D:

No I didn't think of that! Maybe worth a try.

I have a good friend on 40 that is going to send me a custom circuit that is supposed to do all this, and has a smart squelch to. We will see.

Yep, unless your rx has a truly awful frontend even the best preamp is useless or worse. In this case you would probably be better off getting your radio fixed or getting a new radio.

There is a problem here with 'profit'.
I just had a look at where I bought some other stuff, what amplifiers here go for:
100W MOSFET 42 Euro and 86 cent (54 $ and 44 cent).
500W 242 Euro and 93 cent (308 $ and 58 cent).
1000W 660 Euro and 15 cent (838 $ and 55 cent).

Will indeed be hard to make any $$$$ on 100W amps.
Not so different in the US I think, 1700W 650$:
http://www.amateurlinearamplifiers.com./cgi-bin/cart.cgi?user=060921081034&action=subcatdisplay&words=768&source=hotproducts

http://www.amateurlinearamplifiers.com./cgi-bin/cart.cgi?user=060921081034&action=subcatdisplay&words=0170&source=hotproducts

I cannot make 100W for 54$, and I cannot make 1700W for 650$......
You have to count the hours too.

Telstar has been at it now for years.....
At 4$ profit per amplifier you'd have to sell zillions.

OTOH as a learning exercise making them was great.
Just that I stopped when they were at in the street with the radio car to arrest me, spotted them just in time.... OK maybe I had some harmonics... and one licensed amateur was upset.... when he did see me with those big toobes.
'If I hear you I will turn you in'.
He was later overrun by a car IIRC.
It somehow strengthened my faith in God.
But that is all of the past, and not on 27MHz.

Honestly.
Damn are we honest today.

I didn't suspect you were tnom but you just gave yourself away.
Regardless, have you looked inside your computer lately? Did you notice all those 'unreliable' connectors? When was the last time you opened up a piece of electronic equipment with a major brand name like HP? Kenwood? GE? Motorola? Uniden? Do you really think that CONNECTORS are an issue? Naw..... you are just looking for a reason to whine.

On the contrary..... I have a technical concept and it is legally protected for 364 more days. I have business plan with high potential profits, as well as a research project for my Master's degree. I also have many years of experience running my own business and a very solid background in electronic engineering, mostly in the RF field. So you can believe me when I say that this amp is going to be built -and-marketed, either by me or someone else. Not only that, but it may also subjugate the statutory authority of the FCC, should they choose to pursue it.

You, OTOH, have a run-of-the-mill CB amplifier that you can't legally produce or protect. The quality of your product sucks; if it was good it would sell itself and you wouldn't be spamming the newsgroup. You can't even afford decent advertising, let alone an attorney to advise you that this is an illegal and potentially expensive business venture which may result in a felony conviction. You have nothing and are risking everything, including your right to vote. Yet YOU are trying to lecture ME about "profitability"? ROTFLMMFAO!!!!!

So go suck an egg, Brian (or tnom, or whatever alternative personality you are using when you read this).

LOL, maybe it was used in-between by the Russians.
God -to me- is an experience inside yourself that causes bliss, stronger then all the reasoning and thinking we do.

But in those years (sixties) in the sense of 'well there must be one after all' and 'divine justice' etc.
Or 'There but for fortune go you and I'.
It looks somehow some people are destined for some things, it always works for them... Others do the same and fail.
And noting in nature can stop that, or change that.
Maybe that is cunning, some sort of awareness.
Some become astronauts, some lose state secrets... some always end up with radio / tv equipment....
Maybe we have no free will, are a playing ball of all other forces in the universe, and can see in a clear moment where we are thrown.

So we should not blame it on Telstar if anything is wrong with his amp.
I have to admit his PCB looks the nicest of all the ones at that site.
But whre is it heading? I dunno, but it is possible he does.

OK

Bu

The only people who'd know that would be the ones living South of the Mason-Dixon Line and East of the Mississippi (with a spur running up along the Appalachians).

So I think your secret's safe.

SWR bridge, could be done with PCB tracks for 27MHz, http://web.telia.com/~u85920178/use/swrpwr.htm

I opened my Pan SWR / power meter, and it has a zig-zag going PCB track from RF in to RF out, and on each side of these a second track as in the above link.
So the 2 tracks form a transformer with the main track.
No extra parts other then the diodes resistors and caps...

You can also feed the diode outputs into the analog input of a PIC, and also the temp sensor, battery voltage, and rectified input voltage, then you have in power, out power, SWR, and temperature to play with.
In the case of the micro (PIC) you can use one with EEPROM and calibrate with a 50 Ohm dummyload for power.
No trimpots. The SWR is a ratio, can be done in software.
A PIC is almost cheaper then a trimpot these days...

I have tried to make some pics of the PCB of the SWR meter, but could not get close with this lens.

Big view, out of focus:
ftp://panteltje.com/pub/s/1.jpg

This one, close up lens, the wide track goes directly from RF in to RF out PL259, the thinner tracks next to it are the other windings:
ftp://panteltje.com/pub/s/2.jpg

See through with flashlight behind PCB:
ftp://panteltje.com/pub/s/3.jpg

All this should give you the picture how to do a SWR on a PCB.

You're right... it could be done on the PCB. The main advantages with the wireline are a great way of saving board space and is fully shielded. Their performance is predictable, repeatable, and would avoid some iterations of PCB layout I think. I have used them in the past with excellent results.

Computers become outdated in about five years. You would expect connectors to last at least that long. Mobile amps stay in use much longer so that your comparison to computer connectors is an apple to orange comparison.

If you say your modular design is reliable then you must first define reliable.....HP's, Kenwoods, Motorolas that have been in use for thirty years or more will all have connector problems. If those same connectors were solder joints you would eliminate that aspect of reliability. Amplifiers should be made to last even longer. Many forty year old amplifiers are still in use today.

You should incorporate standard connectors for higher voltage lower current lines. Use a combination connector for any combination of higher current or lower voltage on a line. I don't have a specific brand or link but these combination connectors can be plugged in for ease of installation/adjustment and then soldered in place once you are certain that you are done with your adjustment/installation.

As Frank mentioned, think modular for a moment.
You would test this on a simple piece of single sided scrap board, (well I presume you can etch your own?) just for the SWR part.
Once you have a SWR meter correctly working you can either take the layout and paste it into the main board, OK first time, or make some header pins and solder bridges and use it as sub-board,
'option'.
I would do the first.
Many things I designed are just a combination of little pre-tested parts.
[That way] You get a library of circuits over time that works, like stones to build a house, or castle.

I have a VIC-20, a C-64, a CoCo II, an original IBM PC (256K), a generic 386DX-40, and the computer I'm typing on right now which I slapped together about 10 years ago. All of them work fine and none of them have connector problems, although I do have to blow the dust out once in a while.

>>When was the last time you

On one of my benches I have an HP-1707B, an Eico 950B, and a Heathkit IG-72. All are older than 30 years. I let my nephews use this bench.
Nothing on the bench has connector problems.

If there is one general type of electronic equipment that has a wide variety of -lots- of connectors it's the reel-to-reel deck. I have a large collection of vintage decks including Akai, Rheem/Roberts, TEAC, Sony, Wollensak, Ampex, Concertone, Viking.....etc, etc. Most of them are more than 30 years old and none of them have, or had, connector problems except for the occasional loose phone jack.

When I was in the USMC the only connectors I had to replace were on coax cables (the operators were quite rough with them) and the big, bulky interconnection cables used on the command amtraks (which had about 20-30 radios and intercom units and were heavily abused). None of the connectors inside the radios ever needed replacement.

When I was working at the commercial radio shop the story was about the same; mostly coax connectors and the occasional power plug.

During my time at the station, the only connectors that needed replacement were ones that had frequent and punishing use, mostly 1/4" plugs & jacks and XLR's. I don't suspect that the connectors in this amp will get that kind of use.

So for you to categorically declare that any equipment that has "been in use for thirty years or more will all have connector problems" is complete and utter bullshit.

> If those >same connectors were solder joints you would eliminate that aspect >of reliability.

Wrong. Interconnection wires that are soldered have a high rate of failure in abusive environments. That's why auto manufacturers use connectors, even under the hood (and out of the nearly two dozen vehicles I've owned, none of them had any connection problems, either).

If an amplifier worked on 'nice looks' then I might have a different opinion. But they don't. They work on the well-established priciples of electronic engineering.

Most of the bootleg amps are usually overdriven. For example, the Pride 100 is rated for 100 watts output. But most ampheads don't know that 100 watts means the peak power output, and when running AM they need to reduce the input power until the output is only 25 watts (unfortunately, the word "attenuator" isn't part of the amphead lexicon). Then they key down for far longer than the designed duty cycle permits ("duty cycle" also not a part of amphead vocabulary).
And -that's- why the transistors are frequently cooked. And -that's-why this amp is going to have a variable attenuator on the front end, a thermostatically controlled fan, and will include very detailed instructions on how to set up the amp for different operating modes.

As far as "matching problems", if you are referring to mismatched gain in transistor pairs, that only causes harmonics. If the mismatch is great enough to cause one transistor to run hotter than the other, that would be due either to component failure or piss-poor quality control.

>As for your statement about using point to point wiring... bad idea.

Not only are you repeating yourself, but you are -way- out in left field with this concern.....

Power RF bipolars are inherently stable and not likely to oscillate (assuming no wiring errors) because (a) the input impedance is so low that stray RF is going to be heavily damped, and (b) the power gain isn't high enough to overcome the low impedance at the base. You have to intentionally force these things to oscillate, and even then they won't start without a solid kick. Ironically, the only bipolar amp I have seen that -did- oscillate was a single-board design that someone tried to modify for more power [insert Tim Taylor grunt here].

FET's are different because of the high input impedance at the gate. But point-to-point wiring has been used both successfully and reliably in commercial high-power RF transmitters ever since Molly Brown took a ride in a lifeboat. Oscillation problems were resolved long ago when tubes were the only choice. Damping isn't difficult, and shielding between the input and output circuits is a common practice with both FET's and tubes. All you need is a thin sheet of copper, aluminum, or even a blank PC board. Got tin snips?

Hello Brian:

The Smart Squelch is supposed to be smart, just as its said! That is the squelch will open or turn on the receiver audio when a signal is received in the receivers IF. A separate pick off of the IF RF is sampled and then its supposed to only open the Squelch when there is a real signal, and is not supposed to work on noise, bleed over, static and such. The Smart Squelch is supposed to be able to discern between noises and a real RF signal. And its advertised as having a very high percentage of success, being able to only open the receiver with a rf signal and not noise.

I built a Analog Smart Squelch back in the 80's for my Motorola System 500 Mobile SSB/AM CB Radio. (which all ready had a active Motorola noise canceling circuit in the IF Section) It worked real well. It was great driving down the freeway and not hearing motor noise, like setting at home. The Smart Squelch came from a article in a magazine, and I bought the kit and put it together.

But this new circuit is supposed to be digital. I haven't seen it yet.

But I know a lot of guys are using the Heil, Alpha Delta, and others External Speakers with DSP for extra noise cancelling. I have a Heil DSP External Speaker, and it works great, just need a smart squelch to go with it.

I remember something that use a "bucket brigrade" audio delay line in a sqeich circuit in late 70s or early 80s. The audio was delayed a few milliseconds so the hardware would have time to analyse the signal to see if it should be squelched or not. Is this what yu are talking about. Probably a piece of cake for DSP.

My first experience with DSP was in the Air Force. I was sent to school on this new modem and endured a month of theory on how modems worked all built around analog devices. In reality this thing was just a RISC computer attached to D/A and A/D converters. The only thing analog about it was a couple of op amps used on the input and output.. The modem itself was tiny but the cabinet it was in was huge. I guess it had to be this way for all the human interface that was needed.

Your belief that a properly soldered connection is more likely to fail than a connector tells us a lot about the success of your amp. This amp symbolizes your life and is doomed from the start because of your false beliefs. Your long stream of failures continue.

Actually the solder joint doesn't fail. The wire itself fails because of frequent motion and repeated bending of the wire at the weakest point -- where the wire is bare of insulation just above the solder joint. Anybody who has ever owned a portable radio (or anything else) with a 9V battery clip knows exactly what I'm talking about, and I'm sure you do too.

The best connectors are the ones that clamp both the wire and the insulation. Connectors such as IDC, SMA/B/C, BNC, Molex pin & socket, and even common crimp-type ring/fork/spade/hook connectors are all superior to just soldering the wire to the board.

But nice try.

Ok. So what does that have to do with the difference between a PCB

Hello Jimmie D:

Oh really, now thats interesting, the "bucket brigade" type delayed signal for processing. Yeah I would think so, DSP that is now working at the IF Frequencies should be able to handle all that.

Yeah I am sure the Modem must be able to account for data from noise or other unwanted voltages seen. I am no Modem expert but your description sounds like typical of over done military hardware. Maybe the engineers wanting it to look like something big as it really didn't need to be. Trying to sell the hardware, as compared to having to deploy with a bunch of stuff that takes up too much space on a military transport aircraft. Thats where the military needs to hire a separate maintenance consultant group, not looking for a star placed next to their name.

I think we have only seen the tip of the Ice Burg here with DSP (Digital Signal Processing). My old used Icom 746 Pro HF radio, is a first generation DSP radio. I am able to adjust the Radio's IF (Intermedent Frequency) Filters at a snap of a switch. Its noise reduction is fantastic. Stations on USB can almost be rejected when monitoring LSB.

I would think more new wiz bang stuff is coming for DSP.

This is the key. I would certainly like to know how this is

It sounds like your amp can't be soldered because it's unstable.
(physically)

Are you sure that the reason automobile manufacturers use connectors is because they believe a connector is more reliable than a properly done solder joint?

Well, you think wrong. I tried to explain this before but I guess it didn't sink in the first two times, so let me make this -really-simple:

http://bama.sbc.edu/

Many of those radios were (and still are) considered by many to be some of the best ever built. If you really think their chassis wiring construction made their performance "unpredictable" then there are only three possible conclusions: One, that your experience is severely limited; two, that your sanity is in doubt; and three, that you are digging for the lamest of excuses to discredit me at the expense of your own credibility.

I'm guessing the prize is behind door number three.

No, it also has to do with servicability, which is another reason -not- to solder the modules together.

You actually suggested that for reliability reasons a connector is preferred over a proper solder joint.

A quote from you:

" Interconnection wires that are soldered have a high rate of failure in abusive environments. That's why auto manufacturers use connectors, even under the hood"

Give us a break. When practical a properly done solder joint is always more reliable than a connector.

Not exactly, solder joints can 'shear off', actually I had a failed control valve driver in my car, where the solder that connected 2 small PCBs just broke (likely because vibration).
Also there is the issue that now in Europe we have to use leadless solder.
Not a whole lot is known about long time durability.

On the other hand solder has been used also in mil equipment ever since WW2, without problems, if done properly (wires supported etc).
I have had prof power supplies in, where the rubber isolation of the wires was falling apart, creating a dangerous situation.
Mil connectors are to very high spec, and very expensive usually.
Still connectors can cause problem because of dirt etc.. But the little things used in cars are extremely reliable.
One connector is not the other one, not even for a simple D connector, for example AMP makes D connectors where the female has a spring around the gold contacts, while cheaper makes use phosphor - bronze gold plated that only touch on one point.
Good soldering is an art, I noticed what looked one dry joint in Telstars PCB.

Many connectors are these days just pressed on (ethernet, phone, etc) and just as or more reliable then soldered connectors.

Over thirty years?

You can slow down but you can't stop galvanic action, oxidation or migration of foreign materials. If practical use a proper soldered connection to eliminate most of this.

Hello TE:

Yes agreed. I don't have a clue. But somehow its supposed to be able to see the difference. And it can't be perfect, as everyone voice is different, and there has to be a Gazillion types of noises out there!

My computer power supply had to engineered to generate noises and trash in the RF Spectrum. I shielded it, added in filters, grounded the computer like a radio, all helped but was not the cure. A year ago the computer power supply died. The Computer Tech Dude said it was the wrong kind, too small. OH Good!. Now with a modern larger power supply, only the hand held will pick up noises when near the computer, not out in the street. I could always tell when the kid was on the computer from the radio picking up noise from the driveway.

I'll tell ya what, tnom/Brian/whoever: Both of you remember that I have made challenges to you before. Brian refused accept my challenge to test his claims about the harmonic specifications of his amp, and tnom refused to accept my challenge to test his magic antenna (both challenges are still open, BTW). So here's a REALLY SIMPLE challenge to both of you, assuming you really are two different people (which I seriously doubt):

Show me a connector of ANY age (a connector as I specified previously, where the insulation is mechanically secured to the connector with the wire) that failed due to lack of structural integrity and I'll reconsider your argument. Because after 30+ years of experience on hundreds upon hundreds of different pieces of electronic equipment, from televisions to broadcast transmitters to transistor radios to computers to military radio and telegraph equipment to you name it, I have never seen one fail. Not one. And while you are looking, keep a tally on how many wires you find dangling free after breaking off a board, or hanging on to a solder joint by just a strand or two.

Until you find one, I'll consider this issue resolved.

You are the one who has to disprove me. Put up or shut up.

>Show me a connector of ANY age (a connector as I specified previously,

I never said structural integrity. I said galvanic action, oxidation and migration of foreign materials.

You only specified specific connectors after you stated that connectors are more reliable than solder joints. I take it that this means that your imaginary amp will use these specified connectors because you know as I know that great care must be taken with connectors that pass high current or low voltage. If you want them to have any possibility to be sound after thirty years of use you must use good connectors.

Any wire, using a connector or soldered, can break loose if allowed to move repeatedly.

You are full of crap if you are suggesting that thirty or forty year old equipment will not have connector reliability problems when compared to similar equipment with solder connections.

Mismatches only stress transisitors when they are driven beyond the manufacturer's reccommended operating points. Like Frank said, ampheads don't care about specifications. If a transistor is speced for 100 watts then getting 150 watts out it is better.

I suppose that depends upon what sort of shitty community you live in.
Where I live, with some exceptions. users tend to regard it as a legitimate means of communication.

Of course, school holidays tend to drag the standard down, a bit.

Something to be said for radios with a parental keylocking system.

That said, my radio is turned off when I visit Sydney and Brisbane, these days......wasn't , always, like that, though.

If this was a perfect world, we, probably, wouldn't

I had the same problem using a computer power supply. I t really quietened off after putting some small caps across the rectifiers.
You have to remember there are 2 sets of rectifiers. One changes the 120 or 240 vac to 300volts dc or so, this is sent to a switcher where it is turned into AC again then rectified again. I think the caps were .001 for the 60hz part and and .0001 for the switched part. These values are a guess as it has been a while since I did this. I dont think the newer ones have this problem.

I also saw where it is possible to rewire computer power supplies so you can get something on the order of 50 volts at 10 amps. The one I saw took rewiring the transformer with a new secondary and maintaing the 5 volt winding for regulation. I want to get back to this, sounds like it would make a good power supply for a FET amp.

While you are looking for that faulty connector, maybe you should also dig up a 30 year old PC board and take a good close look.

>connectors are more reliable than solder joints.

You were the first to voice your "concerns" about connectors and this was my reply:

"Connectors are a necessity, but they are only problematic if you make them problematic. And since I haven't specified what connectors will be used and where, don't you think you are jumping the gun a bit?"

Actually, I suspected that you weren't jumping the gun at all; that you were just looking for reasons to trash the design before it even got started. It appears that my suspicions were correct.

I think it might be better to hold off your attack until at least some aspects of the design have been finalized. That way you won't sound like a complete moron and blow all your remaining credibility before you have the chance to attack the design on a -reasonable- argument, if there should ever be one.

Possibly

>You can slow down but you can't stop galvanic action, oxidation or >migration of foreign materials.

When the same materials are used, say copper clamped in copper (as in the cable), and gold touching gold (as in the connector surfaces), and if no motion (any connector is limited by a number of matings), there will be little 'migration', no galvanic action.
Oxidation may happen and does any time with copper, and the same with solder!

If you look a bit at the practical side, I had a TV repair shop for many years.
The MOST frequent fault was, in TVs with connectors for the modules, that the connectors pins became un-soldered in the main PCB, due to thermal cycling.
The copper pin expands, it pushes the solder outwards around it, then it contracts, the solder stays where it is.
The same happens with other components that get hot, like coils, transformers, transistors, and if you can still remember these, ALWAYS with tube sockets soldered in PCBs.
I have made good money repairing TVs by just re-soldering the boards.

People who ever worked with wire-wrap will know that wire-wrap is more reliable then soldering, and I KNOW soldering.

It is exactly the fact that solder - copper or whatever layer that can cause problems.

But that does not mean you should not solder.

When I learned soldering, you had to put the wire through the hole, wrap it around the pin or whatever, and _then_ solder it.
To prevent shearing of.

You like soldering, I will show you something, now I have to go to the attic to find some board, be right back,
OK, have it, now some pictures:
Z80 processor board, component side:
ftp://panteltje.com/pub/s/z80_board.jpg

same, _wiring_ side:
ftp://panteltje.com/pub/s/wiring1.jpg
ftp://panteltje.com/pub/s/wiring2.jpg

To give you an idea, it is about 544 connections, all fly-by-wire so to speak, none are marked, this board still works after what is it? 20 years?
Has been upgraded for some more newer chips 10 years ago or so.
Was a computer prototype, build in 3 evenings.

You will note it collected dust, has been dropped, thrown around, abused.
and still all wires are intact, 544 solder connections by hand with multi-strand cable, you need 1) good vision, 2) steady hand, 3) good soldering iron,
4) absolute memory what you did already route.
In this time, when I did this sort of thing, there were no user affordable PCB CAD programs, let alone user affordable multi-layers PCBs.

So, anyways, I think I know about soldering, like it even, so I am not biased if I say it is not perfect.

The 64 pole ac connector works 100% after 20 years.
And likely always will.

No, but anyone with an inch of common sense will realise that living in

On August 18, the FCC wrote Neva Poovey of Newton, North Carolina, citing information indicating that she or someone in her residence had been operating radio equipment that caused interference on 10 and 12 meters. Hollingsworth noted that FCC records did not indicate a license authorizing transmissions on those bands had been granted to anyone at Poovey's address. Poovey's husband Michael responded to tell Hollingsworth he was testing "a huge mobile linear" with another individual in his driveway. A nearby radio amateur complained to the Commission after hearing the transmissions on the two amateur bands.

The problem is that people insist on opening CBs up and turning everything in sight. It would have been better to make everything factory set. Now all you get is vast overdeviation as people think a loud mic = distance using FM. It's just a general lack of knowledge. Most of the interfence caused years ago was by total idiots. They were not happy with 4watts on 27MHz, they wanted 8 watts spread across a few MHz eaither side and only a few watts on 27 due to bad adjustment.
Fortunately most CBers are too thick to do even a simple exam. I did my amateur exams some years ago when it was two exam papers and a 12wpm morse code test.
All you get on the bnds are old people. You're better off sticking to broadband, a mobile phone and MSN Messenger. Why confine yourself to speaking to boring and often very sinister people with only a few interests.

Why paint all CBers with the same brush over a few no brainers over the years,
the same could be said about Ham Ops but that inst the truth as you get good and bad in everything.

Most Cbers that are from the 70s as i am are good radio ops, we get a few losers
but that don't make all CBers losers.

Show me a ham op that's happy and never gone over the power he is lic for, that's the same as driving a car show me a person that has never gone over the speed limit even is its half a K above.

If a CBer is happy to stay a CBer it don't mean they are to thick to do a ham exam.

Some people think that being a ham makes them a better person, they fool themselves
in believing this. .

Allot of ham ops started out on CB radio and lernt by playing with CB radios seeing what they can do with them and then moved up to a ham lic as they understood
and
liked electronics, not everyone does or can.

Hello "klumze", I still work on CB radios on occasion and also have a degree in electronics which helps. However, I live in Oklahoma if you don't mind shipping the equipment to me to fix. I have all the sams books and many other related publications to CB radio as well as test equipment. I've worked on CBs for years and should be able to correct the problems with your radio.

No, they simply blame bad Amateur practice on M3's or pirates branding them CB'ers even though when these idiots mess about on the bands they do not give out their callsigns so it could even be a "revered" G licence. No one really knows but hey... blame CB as it's easy.

> Most Cbers that are from the 70s as i am are good radio ops, we get a few

Of course it doesn't. Some idiots meet up with someone who is as thick as a plank so generalise all CB operators the same. Whereas good operators blend into the background and don't show themselves up like the idiots do so go unnoticed by those who flamboyantly decide "all CB'ers are the same".

If someone claims they, or someone they know, is totally innocent of the above, I will show you a liar.........

CB is a general communication tool for local chit chat. It suits many people just to have a chat with friends on the air, rather than pay phone bills and it's a lifeline to some who can't get out and about due to ill health to keep in touch with the outside world. Talking about things can help people, not everyone wants a computer and internet chatrooms. You have to pay for this, the computer in the first place, the connection, and so on. Not every CB operator wants to DX and take things to the next level where they repair/build etc...

The same as car drivers..... car drivers like to drive. In the same example, unless you were a mechanic and could strip and re-build your engine you must be thick....

> Some people think that being a ham makes them a better person, they fool

It's quite funny sometimes watching the old 'A' class licence Amateurs having a pop at the 'B' licence Amateurs when the only difference between them is the 'A' class were so geeky they learnt Morse code and boy... do they harp on about it... big bloody deal.... an outdated form of communication that has been dropped through lack of interest. Some 'A's go on about it because it is the only thing they ever passed and hold it dear to them as it's the only thing that they think gives them an edge...

Not everyone, as you say, wants to know how the bloody thing works. As long as it does and it works properly and they can use it correctly then they are happy. What is wrong with that? Someone said just the other day, "if it's not G it's just CB", completely ignoring the achievements of M0's etc... The only difference again, being that old bloody Morse nonsense..... Never mind though, in 20 years or so there will be hardly any 'G's left and Amateur radio will be a much more friendlier, interesting place.....

Plenty of up and coming M3's to talk to. As these are referred to by so many

You are free to your opinion, please read my other posting,

I suggest you learn how to use google.
The URL is:
www.google.com

You _will_ have to specify the context of your tests, that is the scientific method.
I _never_ did say 'any connector' is more reliable then 'any solder connection'.

So define your connector and define your solder connection.
You are just generalising the subject, YOU make claims that are not specified, so if you have some experience, other then mains plugs, let us hear about it.
And mains plugs do not normally fail, at least not over here.

Bye ;-)

Well, now, I can say 100% that I have NEVER operated above the power I am licensed to use. I know that for an absolute fact because I have no sets capable of doing more than 400W PEP!!!!!!!!!!!!!

So let's see..

HF set runs 100W max, so that's below my licensed 400W

6 metre set does 10W PEP, so that's well below my licensed 400W

2m set does 50W max, well below my licensed 120W peak allowable on FM.

70cm set does 35W max, again well below my licensed 120W for FM.

Nope, I can definately say, 100% without fibbing, that I have never ran over my licensed power levels on the ham bands... Don't have the gear to do it, and don't have the need to either. Usually don't even need the full 100W on HF so why the hell would I bother with 400W +??????

Point to point wiring does not have to mean the birds nest constuction you describe. RF wiring could well be stamped out metal pieces mounted on Teflon or ceramic. very repeatable, very stable. It could also mean the isolted pad constuction where smalll sqares of PC board are glued to a substrate. This has proven reliable, obviously an improvement over PC board material could be found.and better mounting methods than glue.

There are two big problems I see with most amp designs. One is biasing, even the cheapest Boomer would be much improved if it had an adequae bias circuit. The other is proper setup. I doubt if someone mostly interested in how well they can make the power meter swing will pay much attention to setup instuctions. Attenuators on the front end would be a joke. How would establish proper drive for a given setup with only a cheap power/VSWR meter. FET amps really dont have a stability problem if properly designed. The idea of using a switching power supply to take the voltage up to 50 volts or more is a good one that has already been proven in audio amps. It is impossible to make an amp idiotproof, just when you thingk you have along comes a better idiot.

Not to mention driving in a convoy you never have to worry about losing

At 27MHz 50Ohm this is not critical.

There are many sets on the market, somebody will drive it with too much,
and somebody else will drive it with too little.

You really have no experience now have you?
First the little PCBs just form some extra capacitance to ground.
There is no transmission line.
And you may need that anyways, why else solder those caps over your output transformer.
Second, for a transmission line L and C are important, and L is close to zero here, and f is very low.
The 'length' of the track is very very short in their design.
You can hardly speak of a transmission line at all at 27MHz.
Not a significant part of the wavelength anyways.
'Transmission line' properly matched only implies no refections and some known impedance after all.
And where is this 'line'?

You mentioned that calculator, but did you ever use it?
If so what did you enter for the constants?

Obviously you kneel before the SWR gods. You dont have to have a transmision line to have a matching problem. Matching means to have the output impedance of a driving stage equal to the input impedance of a driven stage so maximum power is transfered with minimum distortion. Nothing was said of transmission lines or SWR.

50 volt power supplies are very cheap to build. if you have the right connection with parts suppliers less than $10.or less figure $ 20 max. Money spent here will also save money elsewhere in the amp. Its a pain in the but to build a decent amp that works of of 12 volts. 50 and 100 volt amps are easy.

Oh I am not questioning 'impedance matching', but some points.
1) He refers to that calculator, that also asks for a track length and load capacitance. In case of distribited loads, and there are of course.

So we need his numbers.

2) The impedance is complex, not simple 'Ohm', and in this case nearly 100% a capacitance, basically the same (leaving out the extra value of the tape or glue), as between a top and bottom PCB layer, you take the surface area, and get a capacitance, it is almost a square 'pad' they use (see pictures) not a stripline! (and so no transmission line with separate in and outputs either).

So we ask him again: What values did you enter, and what dielectric constant for the PCB material and 'tape'.

Yes SWR must match but really that is matching of the antenna to the transmitter, we are here internally, at the most, if there was one!!!!, we were here in the C of an CLC Pi filter, and impedance matching.
And that is linked to SWR for a known 50 Ohm load in this specific case, if the antenna is also 50Ohm.
So, any Pi filter in the output could 'match' the 50 Ohm antenna to any other (higher or lower) transmitter output impedance.
If the input C (the PCB pad cap) changes, the L and output C of the Pi filter will need to be adjusted.
He does not provide a diagram, but question arises if he HAS a Pi filter to reduce harmonics.

How ever you slice it, teh few extra Pf from those pads wll make little difference, maybe he even has a double sided PCB with the same problem of capacitance to the backplane.
It is all just a way to frabricate as many posts pushing his amp as possible, right or not makes no difference, it is not some open source project, secret diagram, just a marketing troll.
No problem with me, but I'd love to hear wha the entered in that calculator, at least if you recommend something you should have used it once.....

So, now for the next episode of 'the better amp'.
Grin

Sorry it is late, need to get up in a few hours,

Who really cares about over 30 years solder or connectors will both last a

When it comes to designing a good amp there is no reason to reinvent the wheel. There is better stuff out there to use than there was 30 years ago and its much cheaper now than ever but for the most part amp design hasnt changed much. For what improvement have been made I see few amp builders taking advantage of them, the same crap designs that have been around for 30 years Most people who can get an amp to work at all think they have done it RIGHT. I see people who have tried to get 10KW out of a 12volt amp and my hat's off to those that pulled it off but this is still some piss poor engineering

It provides negative thermal feedback.

The voltage across the transistor will decrease as the transistor temperature increases. This prevents thermal runaway.

That's what it's supposed to do... I claim it can't work as shown. It's not quite that simple as tacking a few diodes on the bias circuit and laying them on top of the transistors... LOL

Tacking the diodes on to the case of the transistor works better than attaching them to the heat sink due to the relatively slow thermal response, the heat sink changes temperature slower that the cap on the transistor. If you want as fast a response as possible then the diodes are placed about as well as you can get. I've also seen small diodes clipped on to the flange of TO-3 style cases for the same reason. I've seen some high power transistors used for motor drive and high frequency inverter use that has the temperature sensing diode, or thermistor, built inside of the package.

As the temperature of the base-emitter junction goes up the required forward voltage for a given base current decreases. If nothing was done, the base-emitter bias voltage held fixed, the base current for increases and thus the collector current too. Of course increased collector current results in more power dissipation, thus more heat and higher resulting temperature, i.e. thermal runaway.

The diode used for bias temperature compensation has to very closely match the Ib-Vbe curve of the transistor to work effectively . You can't use just any diode and expect it to work very well. The problem with mounting the diode on the heat sink is the large thermal mass. If the transistor starts to go in to thermal runaway the heat sink will take a significant time to heat up, thus reducing the bias to the base-emitter junction, long after the runaway has started. You want to get the compensation right as soon as possible, reduce the base-emitter bias, before the junction gets too hot. The small cap on the transistor will heat up much faster that anything else giving the designer a chance to design a fast responding bias circuit which could avoid transistor destruction.

Diode bias circuits are on their way out in favor of more advance bias circuits. The chief problem with diode bias compensation is either too much, the transistor gets starved for needed bias current, or not enough, tendency to go in to thermal runaway.

The reason the transistor can get starved for bias current is simple. The Beta, current gain, of a bipolar transistor is not constant over the operating range, it varies based on the instantaneous operating point. At some point the gain is so low that the current flowing through the bias compensation diode may drop to a low value, or go to zero, limiting the bias current forcing the operation to go non-linear over part of the cycle. That's why some of the simple diode bias circuits draw so much standing current. It has to supply the worst case bias current. Newer active bias circuits use a voltage source type design. The bias voltage tracks the transistor temperature and since it is a "voltage source" there is no practical limitation on the bias current. The transistor will draw what it needs without being limited by the current limiting resistors in the diode bias type of circuit.

I'm sure somebody is going to nit-pick this post. They're welcomed.

I see everyone is reverting back to one of the major pitfalls of single-board amps: soldering high-power devices right to copper-clad board. My intent was to AVOID this by using solid copper strap, but it's clear that people are determined to use the cheapest materials possible. Therefore.....

I'm going to eliminate soldering of the power transistors completely.
They will be 'wired' using 304 stainless CLAMPS secured to the chassis with teflon standoffs. These clamps will not only provide a much stronger mechanical connection, but will also, in conjunction with the gold-plated flags, eliminate ANY possibility of corrosion in damp (spilled coffee) environments. They will also permit removal of the transistors without de-soldering, prevent heat damage due to some big dummy that solders with an arc welder, and help to -dissipate- heat during normal (and overdriven) operation.

As for cost, the prototype can be cut from a standard beer keg, and in mass production they will cost only a few cents each.

Now that -this- aspect of the design has been finalized, it's time to move along.

Not picking nits, just taking a different approach.....

Thermal bias compensation works to a point but neglects one important issue: it takes time for heat to travel from the junction to the outside of the package, and thermal runaway can happen faster than a -thermal- compensation circuit can respond to it. Since the heat buildup is due to excessive EC current, it makes more sense to control the EC current directly.

There are two solutions that use this approach. One is to include a resistor on the emitter with a TC opposite of the transistor. Not precision but much faster response. The other is to monitor the EC voltage and the base current; send both measurements to a differential OP amp and use the output as feedback for the bias regulator.

I tend to favor the first choice because it has the added benefit of improving linearity. I would only use the second choice in a high profit, 'stick-it-to-the-consumer' product.

There are different versions of the Grant, you need to know which one you have as they are different.

It is possible that each is faulty, but I would look for a common negative connection for the three.

It is possible that the channel selector is also missing one or more connections - so it will be stuck on one channel or not working on any.

Ah, an older Grant version. A manufacturer is unlikely to offer info on something that old, but other sites may.
The board should have a number on it, something like "PC-409AC". This will be on the component side, maybe near the front center of the board.

Get this, and you may be able to get the information from that number.

Unlikely, as they do not go through the PLL (MB8719).
Also, the channel display and PLL each use a separate section of the selector switch.

OK, now you have a 50 Ohm track, and where do you put it?
The only place you could possible use it is to the output connector, and that connection happens to be a wire.

Have a look at those pictures again, the extra PCBs you were _originally_ referring to as needing that website calculator, are just simple solderpads.
The rest is normal wiring.

>P.S. Have no idea what tape you're talking about...

The double sided tape you accused them of using to glue on those extra boards that are used as solder pads.

And, I have to say that .113 inch equals around 3mm width.. your transistor connections and the stuff they are soldered to on your board are wider..

But you score on one point, you caused 2 more posts on the subject of 'Telstar amp'.

You can score a lot more reactions by publishing the diagram, people will have questions and suggestions and maybe even [positive] critism if you do.
So let's have it OK?
You are no chicken to show it no? It is free of flaws I am sure?

I have a satellite dish motor (outside), opened it up, they have immersed the PCB in wax (parrafine?) to make it corrosion proof.
It is just a very thin layer that covers all components.
Seems to work.
Even though I pricked the scope through it at some points to measure things.

That lookes like 1A diodes, and would be no problem.

All you phantasies, your lack of a decent Pi filter, you failing to grasp heat rises upwards (you can hold your hand next to a candle but not above it), so diodes _above_ transistors is _good_, but I will show you how the profies do it, this is what runs here:
http://www.cbtricks.com/radios/rci/rci_2970/graphics/rci_2970_main_sch.gif
It is a big gif, go to bottom left corner, there is the amp, the Pi filter, and the temp stabilaziation a bit to the right of that.
Oh, and the on board SWR meter (all teh way at the left).
And here is the amp PCB layout:
http://www.cbtricks.com/radios/rci/rci_2970/ept295042z_rf-amp_pcb.htm
It is only 150W PEP, but it works great here.
And no harmonics with that filter.

Oops, do I see 2 diodes in parallel? Must be me eyes ;-)
Oops it is 1N4001.
So now copy-cat the Pi filter?
Oh what, you have the whole diagram.

I have to point out that the Ranger 2970 is a nice set, clocked many hundreds of hours here, not one problem.
Good sound quality too.

OK over to Telstar for the Telstar diagram, hey if Ranger publishes theirs, what have you got to hide?
And they are making $$$$

More like a conformal coat material other than parafine wax. That stuff is to flammable to screw with when in liquid form. There are numerous coatings for printed wire boards that can be used. They range from clear to opaque. Some are soft and maliable to hard and not so easy to remove.

These DO NOT offer a hermetic seal and can allow moisture into the printed wire board. Only hermetic seal would be to place the board in a solder sealed box that may or maynot contain a inert gas inside.

I have to agree that 50 ohm striplines are useless in an amp like this, it is only important that the output impedance of the driver stages match the driven stage. I cant see how you could do this with striplines on a broadband amp at HF. There is already proven interstage design. NEW and IMPROVED means new and improved over 30 year old technology. Bring CB amps up to current technology would mean only advancing them about 10 or 15 years from the 70s . Even in the 70s it was well known how to build a decent amp but this is not what the CB market wanted then or now. As far as other markets are concerned it is already very crowded and difficult to get ones foot in the door.

What do they "support"? Up / down scanning, or do they actually allow it from the microphone? Not all radios which use up and down buttons on the radio may have the connections available for the microphone.

> and I'm a little curious on how its setup and wondering > how hard it'd be to take a better mic and add the

If the radio has the connections on the microphone socket and the new microphone has the buttons, you simply wire the new microphone correctly for that radio.

If the radios do not have the connections, you will have to trace them on the PCB and make connections. If the microphone socket has not enough pins, you will need to change it.
If you do this, try to make the wiring like a standard radio with scan on the microphone... so it's easy to remember or look up the wiring.

> Really and truely, the up/down feature isn't something I > have to have, and there's times it gets in the way....

What are the radios?
There is a microphone wiring database on my site (below). If your radios allow scanning from the microphone, the data should be there.

Be very careful. Some radios that have scanning from the microphones MUST be wired correctly first time. Mistakes can pop the PLL, which can be expensive.

Peter.

Well, I mentioned that it does not make a lot of difference at 27MHz, the 50 Ohm part would be from the input PL259 to pre-amp or transformer or whatever, and the other 50 Ohm part from the output of the Pi filter to the output PL259, and in most cases these will be wires...
If you were to be consequent, then you would have to make the collector and base match those relevant impedances too, and any outer part of the circuit.
The distances are so short however that this is not practical.
From the driver transformer to the bases, from the collectors to the output transformer, and all different impedances at that.
Better keep these collector traces wide so they function as cooling and have low resistance!
I am not sure anybody bothers with those impedances.
On the Ranger PCB double sided (you can get the layouts, click on the link top left in the PCB component drawing) for example, there is a about 2 cm long track from the output of the Pi filter to the relay, with _on_the_other_side_ of the board a parallel track that is the SWR meter tap!
(The layout is mirrored, you have to flip it in thought to see that).
So even there they do not bother, but simply play transformer.
In the relay itself it is lost completely (the 50 Ohms) I suspect.
It is better to fix those things that really make a difference, good Pi filter, good output stage matching to the 50 Ohm connector, SWR protection, temp protection, perhaps drive control.
Funy LCD display, LEDS, reset button, build in mp3 player, toaster, alarm clock, the works.
I should write LOL, but hey, it is true, anything has a mp3 player these days, even my video camera.
If they just had used a better lens, and left out the player....
OK, marketing... give people what they want, they want the LCD.
Blue LEDS, orange LEDS.... all that.

Exactly. That's why those diodes are place on the ceramic cap of the device and not on the heat sink.

This is done in many audio amps. The chief problem is the negative feedback introduced by the emitter resistor. At auto frequencies this resistor is bypassed by a rather large electrolytic capacitor sized such that at the lowest frequency of interest the reactance is much smaller that the emitter resistor value. Thus the "AC" gain isn't affected much by the emitter resistor.

Believe it or not I've seen many of the old Motorola RF devices use internal emitter resistors. Those took the form of many small tungsten bonding wires from different areas of the emitter structure to the emitter terminal. The main idea there was the many wires, resistors, in parallel resulted in a very small overall emitter resistor. Also they found that a problem called "second break down" would occur if they didn't do this.
What it amounted too was local hot spots, thermal runaway, in tiny areas of the transistor's emitter structure. I think the term they used for RF devices built this way was "emitter ballasting".

> The other is to monitor the EC
> voltage and the base current; send both measurements to a differential

You would have to look at the "DC" emitter current minus the "AC" component, which I don't think is going to be so easy to do.

Having the sensing on top of the transistors is a poor location.
The internal die is in intimate contact with the heat sink... not the top! The heat sink... preferably near the device is the proper location for any tracking device.

I have never seen tungstun bonding wire. All I have ever seen is gold.
You need a soft malible metal to bond to the die pads on any semicondcutor. The bond wire is sonic heated to the aluminum metal die pad. This forms the nice ball on the die pad that is a weld of the aluminum and gold. Tungstun is far to hard a metal for bonding.

Emmitter ballasting is done on the die within the emmitter matrix.
There are several metods of fabricating an RF transistor. Major factors are power, frequency and device operating point. For most transistors operating below 50 MHz use an interdigitated emmitter geometry. Incorparated within are current balancing resistors in the emmitter matrix. This does increase die size and reduces gain. It does spread heat and current more evenly through the die. Interdigitated emmitters will have multiple bond wires.

But if it's Woger's nameless frogger (and I do vaguely recall hearing something about Wiseman's incarceration, back in 2000 or 2001, now), who shall be henceforth known as "Woger", "Wabbit", or "Wiseman", by Imperial decree from Teh Court of MEOW, then Formosa's Rule doesn't apply. Now, >think it's any less important in an amp such as this???

OK, I will now explain, as this is the second time you ask, and you fail to see some basic concepts.

OK, lets assume you _have_ a perfect 50 Ohm PCB track.

No lets also assume you _have_ a perfect 50 Ohm source impedance to drive it.

What would we need to f*ck this up 100% by means of the 'impedance mismatch' you are so worried about?

Simple, here is an example:

50 Ohm Generator ------------------------------------ B
|| end open (not terminated) PCB track of 50 Ohm impedance.
T ||
||__ GND

So _HOW_LONG_ should track T need to be to form a short for say 10 meters wavelength?
If it was to be a short, the reflected wave from the non terminated (open) end would have to arrive in the exact opposite amplitude back in A, to 'nullify' the signal in conductor B, resulting in 0V signal in B.

. forward wave
========= transmission line
. . reflected wave

For this to happen, the transmission line would have to be a quarter wavelength long, so 10/4 = 2.5 meters long.
A 1/4 wavelength length coax that is not terminated at the end will form a short for that wavelength.

So when will any of this become interesting for 27MHz? well if your PCB track length are really transmission lines of a significant part of a quarter wavelength.
For 2.5 cm length tracks this is only 1/100 and the reflected signal is almost the same as the original.

Here explained as a whole tutorial:
http://www.tpub.com/content/neets/14183/css/14183_18.htm
You should read all of this site actually, just use 'back' and 'next' to page through the tutorial.
Very good tutorial.

So you asked before 'when does this issue become important?'.
It becomes important when the designer thinks a significant enough effect is present.
This will normally be when we work with wavelengths that are closer to the PCB track length,
As you want no harmonics ;-) this should not be a big issue in the case of your amp.

I sincerely hope you did read, or are going to read, that tutorial.
http://www.tpub.com/content/neets/14183/css/14183_51.htm
Also I expected some remark, but anyways;
Look ma, no math:
http://www.allaboutcircuits.com/vol_2/chpt_13/6.html

It is interesting stuff, once you start designing for GHz range, or fast digital logic, a must.
But it will help you with the CB antennas and cables too.

I would not lose sleep over you PCB track impedances in that amp, just make sure the Pi filter matches that amp to 50 Ohms, else any reflections will be from the coax back to the amp, not from any PCB traces.

This is not correct. there is no 'overshoot' in temp possible.
Unless you know how to heat solder to 250C with a 200C soldering iron?
An other Telstar miracle ;-)?
The thermal response will be faster, resulting in better protection.
A slower response could result in reducing current too late.

Is this what becomes of failed brew? Steve said they come from under rocks, and I had it in my mind that they're formed from various kinds of bodily waste, but bad beer makes as much sense as anything else.

Nope! Never tangled with 'im. Got thoroughly sick of him, back in 2000, though. It doesn't matter if you're not really Wabbit, since you're not readily identifiable as anyone else, and all your morphs are lames of your "enemies", which was a Woger hallmark. Since I'm not a reg in RRAP, but in AUK, I can't possibly hope to ID you properly, either. Therefore, you are "Wabbit", until you decide to come out of your hole and be a human.

TEH WAY OF THE K00K
Never learn from your mistakes.
Always practice your mistakes; you may get them right.
Always pick on those smarter and tougher than you.
Always believe that only you know the TRVTH.
Never allow logic or reason get in the way of a good k00k.
When being overwhelmed by logic and reason: k00ksuit!
If you are going to be wrong, do it at the top of your lungs.
When caught in a lie: LIE!
When in doubt: Order the Crab Won Ton
Plagiarism is your friend. Use it.
Whenever contradicted; morph, start calling people names, and make false accusations. Include the children of your target in your allegations, even if they don't have any.
(06-Jun-05) When nobody else will listen, post to your own fan group.
(06-Jun-05) Obviously, since you have your own fan group, this must mean that you have fans. Post prolifically to your fan group - you wouldn't want to disappoint them!
(10-May-2005)Everyone reads usenet. Approval here means approval everywhere.
Post numerous blank posts, or posts containing only a message id.
Post numerous copy&paste web articles from crackerpot websites.
Never forget to call kookologists "k00ks."
If there are several, call them "sockpuppets" too
When all else fails, accuse various and sundry kookologists of e-mailing viruses to you. This is a sure-fire method of garnering sympathy and ensuring that the General Public will always see things your way. An especially effective sub-strategy here is to accuse them of infecting you with the 'Sasser' worm via e-mail.
Quote notorious scientists or writers - it makes it look as if they approve the drivel you are writing!
(9-Jul-05) Anytime your computer is infected with a virus, bogged down by spyware, attacked over your internet connection, or otherwise suffers from preventable problems, government agencies are responsible and are trying to silence you and are monitoring your computer files.
Ignore all traffic signs and feel free to trespass, you don't have to obey any rules.

Scare your enemies with lawsuits, police escorts and whines.
Always back up your empty (albeit noisy) threats with phony LARTs, false police reports, and harassing letters to the FBI and other gubbermint agencies.
Be vigilant in your redundancy. The more you repeat yourself, the more likely others will believe you!
If you can't find anyone as crazy as yourself to support you in the flamewars you start with the normal population, create sock puppets and use anonymous remailers that shamelessly hang on every word you write.
(17-Mar-05) When dealing with law enforcement, remember that it is they who have the problem, not you. Be sure to inform them of this at every available opportunity, as they will surely appreciate your constructive criticism. Be sure to make them aware that YOU KNOW YOUR RIGHTS! ("The cops like that, when people know their rights. That way they don't have to read them to you on the way to the station." - George Carlin)
The more your fake personalities adulate you, the more respect you'll get!
When confronted with a reality that you don't like: Announce loudly that you are departing, never to return as long as there's an Internet. Come back in three or four days and claim you were drunk, hacked, abducted by alience, or forged. Alternately you can just not even mention your prior departure, and if anyone asks you about it, either ignore them or respond with something along the lines of "YOUR NOT THE BOSS OF ME! PLONK!" People really know you mean business then.
Always remain clueproof.
(20-Mar-05) Anyone who does not believe that you are the reincarnation of [$DEITY_OR_PROPHET] is obviously an infidel lacking in faith whose soul in in peril of everlasting damnation.
When responding to one line challenges, post paragraphs of rants and screed in response.
Incoherency is not a roadblock to poasting.
Neither is illiteracy.
Delusions poasted often enough become fact.
Claim you will destroy for attacking you.
When spnaked, send cmsg for Fanboi newsfroup(s).

Always sneck the offending newsfroups.
Always poast pictures of yourself so you can be admired in all your k00ky glory.
Always accuse others of the very acts you are guilty of.
Post lots of boasts about your high IQ and incredible talents.
(20-Mar-05) If you repeat a lie often enough, it becomes the truth. Anybody who fails to understand this is engaged in a deliberate campaign of misinformation and character assassination.

They've nuked hundreds of accounts in the name of free speech and yours will be next.
The k00k will, without any trace of irony, lie, manipulate, impersonate, censor, and declare themselves powerful in ways ranging from the ability to have an account shut down to being God Herself, in order to convince people that they are not liars, manipulators, censors, or insane.
Abuse women while telling how many hundreds you've loved. Nevermind that you're one ugly motherfucker and that there were 30,000 femininas that thought you were a scumbag with bad teeth.
Remember that your ko0ky klaims are 'facts', and that 'facts' do not require proof.
Do not neglect to poast your responses to forums that the originator doesn't read. This will make the people in that forum very impressed with how you tear him to shreds without him being able to respond. They like it even better if you are off-topic for that forum.

Publishing people's real names, addresses, and phone numbers when there's no other way for you to come out of a flamewar with any dignity is cool, and proves that you are a master of secret internet information stores, and absolutely not to be fucked with.

Correct. That's a mistake on my part.

I did read in the Motorola manual they did, or tried, to use it in a stack up of metals since they saw a problem with electromigration of the gold used in the bonding wires with the silicon base material.

Correct. The two methods I did read about are polysicicon resistors or

Why don't YOU produce a real amp? Instead, you hawk your baby CB only drivers as real amateur amps. In reality, what you produce is not worth the time to install with the tiny amount of amplification, and the expense per watt.

Go with the Maco. Your neighbors will like you better. Most of the fiberglass verticals, although they do work well, are horrible at decoupling the coax shield, and tend to radiate from the coax. This can be tamed by adding a few turns of coax at the feedpoint, but the angle of radiation will still be high. Another thing to consider is lightning. Having had several fiberglass antennas destroyed by lightning, I switched to the Maco, took another strike, and had NO damage to the antenna. The coax was another story, but that can be replaced easily.

Nah, the village idiot is the "perfesser" who wants to sell his beautiful toy amps here. Yes perfesser, they do look really nice, but they are toys.
And to boot, you can manage what, 12 copies per year? Wow! What cash cow you've come up with! I know, you'll come up with yet another witty response, but the truth hurts. Deal with it.

And hey, how's that last amp selling on eBay?

It's better than the heat sink.

Wrong. The ceramic package isn't hollow; on the contrary, it contacts more of the junction's surface area than the heat sink flange (which, BTW, doesn't make "intimate contact" with any part of the junction because it is insulated from the die by the Be Oxide substrate). The fact is that a transient pulse can heat and blow the junction before it can dissipate into the -anything-, which it's more likely to happen when the transistor is already hot from normal operation.

For starters, a transmission line behaves like a transmission line because of reactance. When your transmission line is a small fraction of the wavelength (as is the case with your "stripline") then the reactive impedances are insignificant. IOW, your "stripline" doesn't behave like a transmission line (i.e, have a characteristic impedance) because it's just too damn small.

What IS significant is the TOTAL impedance. Increasing the size of your "stripline" will reduce the resistance while having a negligible effect on the reactive impedance, thereby reducing total impedance. It would also reduce resistive heating -and- increase heat dissipation; doubling the width of your trace makes it capable of handling FOUR times the load before it cooks off the board.

Now what were you saying about "maximum power transfer"?

Actually, that's not such a bad idea. Computer processors and other chips are encased in ceramic and the heat sinks are typically mounted on top. Having an additional heat sink on the top of the transistor certainly can't hurt. I'll check into this and see if it's do-able.

Not hard enough, I'd say. Woger, you see, had a particular style, as a lame pedo-k0oK/torll, and you, my little butt-monkey, mimic it only too perfectly. Anyway. I think you have provided my colleagues with sufficient evidence, over the past six weeks, of the perfect fit this award is for you, and since George "fluty1" Maloney desperately needs some decent competition, I, Snarky, do hereby -- assuming I haven't already made any other noms or seconds for the award, but I don't think I have -- nominate for the Joseph Bartlo Pathetic Anal Pineapple: Woger "Wabbit" Wiseman/his frogger-cum-imitator/aka "nameless non-person with no life or identity of his own"/aka "Not Cocksucker Lloyd"/aka "markie_morgan_rapes_boys"/etc.

Seconds?

In the link above the diodes are not in parallel at all. Look at the schematic.

In the link you initially provided they are indeed in parallel, but that doesn't mean they are intended to conduct equal currents. If that were the case then they would have current equalizing resistors in series with each diode. From what I can see in the picture, it's clear that only one diode will be working at any given time: the hot one.
And I'm sure that's exactly what was intended.

Very low voltage, too. Some might even call it a "ground potential".

Apparently it works well enough for a homebrew amp.

Hey, look what I found on a quick google search:

Yes, I already knew that, Brian. I tried to turn you onto the right path years ago when you were hacking basic Motorola AN circuits that were intended to be starting designs for engineers, not finished products to be built by CB ampheads. But you were just too impatient to get your "product" sold and get your share of that illegal market. After damage control backfired in your face (because of your lack of education) you vanished. Now you pop back up to spam the group every time you think you have an improvement. You haven't made very many changes, but look at the ones you -did- make -- all were suggestions that I made when I told you all the reasons your amp sucked. Maybe you learned those things from me or maybe somewhere else, but I was right and you know it......
==========

So contrary to recent opinion polls, it's clear that you -can- learn things. You just can't admit that you learned anything from someone else because that might be bad for business.

Hey Jan, wanna know why Brian won't cut loose his schematic? Because Brian is a hack and his special bias circuit was most likely ripped from this link, which was posted in this group a couple years ago:

Back in the 70's i had a colinear clr-2,very good antenna about 19' tall with 3, 9' radials,excellent recieve and transmit,wish i could find another one.
i had a starduster,good antenna, i didn't like the way it mounted,than after that i got a shakespeare 18' fiberglass something like the antron,lost a lot of signals compared to the starduster.also had a super scanner by antenna specialist,it was 3 vertical elements, you rotate the signal and not the antenna,not bad,but missed signals compared to the other antennas. i always wanted to try the astro plane antenna, they still make them.or the sirio, the one that looks like it's upside down. the antenna i have now is the i max 2000.not bad i guess, i just want to try something else.

Yes, I'd say my fanboi seems distinctly upset. I think he wants to be left alone to out anyone he feels like outing in "his" group. It's not fair, is it, when people call you on your shit, and refuse to let the matter drop when you want it dropped, hmmmmm? I think that's very sad.

The diode method works, it's just not idiot-proof so it's no good for a production CB amp. So why didn't you incorporate the concept in your earlier amps instead of vehemently defending your no-bias Class C POS by claiming that "linearity is not required for SSB"?

Try building your own. Hoist it as high as possible, the higher the better. Or get an el-cheapo antenna tuner ($10-20) and throw some wire into a tree -- works better than any prefab antenna I've ever tried.
Or use the tuner to load up whatever is available: rain gutter, flag pole, bed spring, 'laundry-line array'..... the only limitation is your imagination.

No, it's not. I explained this before but apparently it flew over your head. So I'll try to make it a bit simpler for you: Instead of having a single diode checking the heat of two transistors, this guy used one diode on -each- transistor. They may be wired in parallel but they are -not- expected to work at the same time. Why? Because the bias will be fixed by the diode with the lowest Vf, which will be the hotter of the two diodes (Vf decreases as temperature increases).

>Unlike you... I have certainly tried it before. It doesn't work... for >the reason I stated.

Well Brian, I -have- used the circuit before, in several different variations, and yes it -does- work.

Guess what, Brian? I took a closer look at the pic and it turns out the diodes are IN SERIES! Doesn't matter tho, because as I was browsing the other photos it appears that the amp has a seperate bias regulator circuit that was added and is controlled by the Vf of the two diodes in series, which is an even better method.

Regarding the parallel circuit, I'll save myself the effort of digging the scanner out of the closet; Here are a couple literary references from my bookshelf that you can probably dig up at your local library.
Both of them have circuits that utilize the same parallel arrangement in one form or another:

Motorola Power Transistor Handbook, 1961 (and probably other years)
(see section on power inverters)

Electronic Circuit Design Handbook, EEE Magazine, 1971-74 (several different circuits in various sections)

If you can't find those books, can't find any references yourself, and can't figure out how to set up a simple test circuit to verify its operation, let me know in a month or so when the weather goes sour and I'll have more time to spend on your education.

Wabbit, you adopted his style, his mannerisms, and his vocabulary, so, since you have no clear identity of your own, you are he. There is no other obvious means of identifying your lameness, so you're Wiseman. If you have an argument with that reasoning, there's a simple solution:
Reply to this under either your legalname or your own nick. Betcha won't, coward.

You mistake me for someone who is interested in ham radio, however, when in fact I'm just interested in the kookology of radio hams. Man, are you guys k00ks! Not just you either, Wabbit. Slow Code's very k0oKy, as is Mark (in a boring way), and I think there are quite a few others, including Cletis Perkins (though he may well be BowTie, looking for more attention from AUK).

1. Measure voltage at point (a) with respect to ground.

2. Heat D1 with a soldering iron. Watch voltage drop.

3. Let D1 cool. Watch voltage go back up.

4. Heat D2 with a soldering iron. Watch voltage drop.

5. Let D2 cool. Watch voltage go back up.

Well, you just proved your foolishness by:

(1) contradicting the engineers at Motorola and other transistor manufacturers who use diode biasing in the test circuits for nearly every bipolar RF power transistor ever made;

(2) proving that you have never actually measured the open-base voltage of a bipolar RF power transistor (hint: it's less than logic would dictate);

(3) failing to understand that a bipolar transistor is a CURRENT amplifier, not a VOLTAGE amplifier;

(4) demonstrating that your internet education didn't include the basics of semiconductors -- specifically that the Vf/If curve has a slope greater than zero;

(5) ignoring the fact that those "parallel" diodes which you thought were "puzzling" were actually in series and used as temperature sensors for a seperate bias regulator circuit; and

(6) posting your technical ignorance and inexperience in a public forum where it can be read by any potential buyer of your amp.

So what's next from you, Brain? Some vague, Skippy-esque excuse about how it's "part of a bigger picture"? Will you pull an Eitner and deny the facts based on a claim of omniscience? Or will you just go back to your same old fallacious argument that anyone who has never built a cheap CB amp doesn't know squat?

The circuit works. If it didn't work for you then either you screwed it up or didn't understand its function. I'm guessing both.

It's not "taboo" in any book. It's only a problem if your intention is for them to share the current equally, in which case all you need is some form of current equalization. If they are -not- intended to share the current equally (as in the circuit I described earlier) then it is not a problem at all but a benefit. This happens often in electronics, when a component, with undesireable characteristics when used in one circuit, can be used to advantage in another. In fact, that's how the zener diode was "invented". Did you miss that class, too?

> There's the "electronic world"... and then there's the

Make all the excuses you want, Brian -- it doesn't change the fact that you are an internet-educated hack.

I deleted the "sex with niggers' and the jesus and mary stuff, et al, but perhaps I'll leave the rest up there for all the rest to see.

(I'd love for him to show up to kick the shit out of my "super-gay soldier asshole". Apparently your frogger hasn't read my home-defense poasts.) Does he/she have something against soldiers?

I'll go back to being sedated, once more and leave ya'll to it.

It's ironic how you patronize to avoid the facts while still laboring under the delusion that your advertising gimmick is working to your benefit. Have you ever thought about going into politics?

I believe he thinks I do, because of my anti-war stance, which makes his own pro-war stance pretty obvious, not to mention his problems with lojik...

The foam duck in question is the one who thinks anyone is _bothering_ to "guess" who you are. You adopted Woger Wiseman's style, and that's enough to get you the nickname of "Wabbit". Woger was never a flamer, but he

No Markie, it is a reference to you living for being harassed and humiliated in numerous newsgroups. You crave being pointed out as the imbecile that you are. You are a tit-for-tat moron. You know, the type person that talked smack in school, then ran to the principle for protection.

As far as my name, well, that's none of your business. I don't care what yours is either. It has no bearing on the FACT that you are an idiot. Get over it. If you knew my name, would it matter? No, because you are too much of a pussy to confront ANYONE in person. Please don't latch onto this name thing and continue crying about it.

lying again anytime you talk about putting a foot (presumably your up someone ass without their consent you are making a threat

I don't I simply choose who to deal with my foes, and that selction offends you in some manner

The God of Odd Statements, the Ugliest Pigfucker In The Universe
Stupidity Takes Its Toll. Please Have Exact Change.
Thread where outing begins: http://tinyurl.com/hojf8
George Pickett Memorial Trophy, Special Ops Cody Memorial Purple Heart, and the Order of the Holey Sockpuppet winner <wfh_jr@hotmail.com> on outing personal contact info in x-poasted subject lines:
"Plenty of people post under their real names and do not attempt to hide their contact info. You are scared of being 'outed' because you are a pathological abuser of usenet, and people rightly despise you for it.
You're afraid of being reported to the authorities or, better, visited by a couple of guys with baseball bats. Other people don't have this obsessive fear. Ward Hardman himself has posted plenty of personal information - nothing that anyone else added was hidden in any way.
You're so fucking scared you've built up this whole sick mythology about different categories of bad dudes who 'out' scum like you.

"Meanwhile you are the ugliest pigfucker in the universe. You are the coward without ethics. You call me a 'newbie' - ha! what an asshole you are. Those who want to remain anonymous do so. There is absolutely no way you could identify me, not unless you had the sort of subpoena power that only gets turned on for big-time terrorists. That's because I chose to be anonymous. Some people don't. Only really stupid dicks like you choose the sort of semi-anonymity which leaves you in constant fear.

"What a dickless wonder you are 'Snarky' you fat asshole."

Paid to be a "kookologist". What a k00ky perception!

Do you file taxes on the money you earn, Outer Filthï¿½?

Yeah, it's a great piece of science fiction.....

You -can- run the transistors that hard..... they will splatter all the way up into the UHF band for about 10 seconds then burn up. The transistors are designed for 100 watts PEP each but the IMD product jumps dramatically above 60 watts PEP. Then there's his claim of 55% efficiency from a Class AB amp..... and built with transistors that are only rated for 35% efficiency. Hey, if you believe that, I have some really nice farmland for sale just off the coast of Montana!

My favorite part is his "compression region" scam. Audio compression can be a good thing in radio communications, but he's using the term as a euphamism for non-linear amplification of the -radio- signal. Not only that, he arbitrarily designates a "1% compression point" as some sort of threshold beyond which harmonics -might- cause a problem. Let there be no confusion here: Harmonics -will- be a problem beyond this point, especially if you run AM because you will need to reduce your carrier (dead-key) to less than one fourth of this threshold. So don't expect to run more than 30-50 watts AM from this amp or you will have a lot of pissed-off neighbors.

But I'll give him credit where credit is due: If you want an amp that -LOOKS- like it was professionally made then his is the one to buy.
Just don't use it and compare the performance with the spec sheet or you'll be sorely disappointed (if not furious!).

i have 2 sets and also a galaxy 5 valve 1 Killowatt by CTE International
the valves in bremy are 6JB6A available at chemer valve or other suppliers. The 2 sets i have are in my shed i can check if the have functionallity but they havnt been used for approx 10 years. they were painted black and i fitted new knobs they look really snazzy now but one set has plastic rocker switched the other set have metal. condition
?? dont know Email me Marking the mail with AAA so i get it ate the top

In our small county some of us do both ham & CB public service work. If I want to be fully accepted by the hams, how many and what is the proper placement of ID stickers on my car? to be accepted by the hams, my buddy suggests a minimum of 42 "Member ARRL" stickers, placed in every window of my car, along with at least three more antennas mounted on the car. He said I will make a big hit with the hams, if I place a large metal tag on the car which says, "My hobby is Amateur Radio." Do you have any more suggestions?

seven-thirds,

Doug

Yep, their 'defibition' is right on the money. Now I suggest -you- do a little math with power dissipation and efficiency ratings. BTW, how did you get your distortion figures?

I didn't dispute it in the first place. This has to be about the tenth

So how did you calculate the "1dB compression point"?

But how do you measure power with a spectrum analyzer?

And have you done the math yet for your power dissipation problem?

Hello Doug.....
The first thing you must do to be accepted by local hams is to do oral sex on the local "club's" "big shot ham".

Hams love to suck off hams of a higher license class. Now, extra class hams love to "elmer" nice young boys into this fine hobby we call amateur radio. Oh, don't forget to have a name tag along with your call. It shows a willingness to suck cock.

Well, they designed the transistor for a specific application, and the test circuit is rated at 28MHz, so I'm pretty sure they knew exactly how it was going to be used.

<snip>

Since you don't want to do the math yourself, I'll do it for you.....

You claim 516 watts PEP and 55% efficiency. And I'll be super-nice and say that's at 14 volts and you aren't going into saturation. So that means:

516 watts / 14 volts = 36.86 amps
36.86 amps / 55% efficiency = 67 amps
67 amps / 2 transistors = 33.5 amps Ic on each transistor.

Well that's a problem since the transistor is rated for an absolute maximum of 25 amps at the collector. A paradox to be sure. But wait...

An efficiency of 55% means that 45% is dissipated as heat. So:

33.5 amps * 45% = 15.1 amps
15.1 amps * 14 volts = 211 watts

Wheee, that's friggin' hot!!! Especially when the device is only rated for 250 watts dissipation max, assuming a perfect heat sink! Now a 200 watt soldering gun will glow red in just a few seconds..... should we take a brief sojourn into reality and calculate junction temperature?
I'm betting it will greatly exceed the max rated 175 degrees. Care to take that bet, Brian?

Once again you didn't understand what I wrote. I wasn't calculating amplifier efficiency; I calculated peak collector current -based on-your very own amplifier efficiency claim. Would you rather I use the transistor's collector efficiency of 35%?

>Are you really this stupid?... or are you just putting us on?

I have thought of asking the same question of you, but I haven't because you would ignore it just like all the other tough questions.
That, and I already know the answer.

Ok, we'll use the collector efficiency.....

516 watts / 14 volts = 36.86 amps
36.86 amps / 35% efficiency = 105.3 amps
105.3 amps / 2 transistors = 52.65 amps Ic on each transistor.

And since 65% is dissipated as heat,

52.65 amps * 65% = 34.22 amps (Scary!)
34.22 amps * 14 volts = 479 watts.... HOLY SHIT!!! You better have a BIG MF HEAT SINK!!! Are these transistors water-cooled?

You measured output power with a spectrum analyzer, so why should I believe that you measured harmonic distortion with anything more than a wattmeter? Of course I don't believe you, Brian; you haven't made a single verifiable claim regarding any of your amps. In fact, I can guarantee that your 516 watt PEP figure was never measured but only fabricated (what you call 'estimated', just like you 'estimated' the distortion figures on your previous Class C splatter-boxes).

Since you still can't address the issues, once again I will address them for you:

The PEP to carrier ratio of 4 to 1 presumes a linear response. The problem is that these transistors (operating above 100 watts PEP; or, more specifically, your "1dB compression point") are not only horribly NON-linear, but you will be pushing them into saturation way before reaching your fabricated figure of 516 watts PEP. Don't believe me?
Crank up your amp and try it. Pump in enough carrier to bring the output to 129 watts then modulate at 100%. I doubt it will even reach 400 watts PEP, and I have -no- doubt that the harmonic content will be absolutely horrendous.

I also have no doubt that the amp won't last ten seconds under these conditions because the thermal resistance of the heat sink that is required to operate at this power is -0.26 degrees C/W.... and yes, that's a NEGATIVE number which means you need ACTIVE cooling, and a lot of it!!!

See what happens when you refuse to do the math? You end up proving that you have don't have the engineering background to build even a -CHEAP- CB amp....."LOL"!!!

According to his own graph the output power levels off at about slightly above 155 watts. Assume 165 watts.

This in reality means that a 100% single tone modulated AM signal can reach PEP values of around 165 watts. So that his amp should be rated around 40 watts carrier on AM and around 160 watts PEP on sideband.

You are doing the math backwards.

You must take the maximum power the amp can deliver before saturation.
That will be your approximate PEP rating. Then divide that figure by four to get the approximate carrier level for AM.

You are determining the max output and then just assuming that you can multiply that by four to get the PEP rating. (129 x 4 = 516) It doesn't work that way.

That's theoretical, based on maximums, and you know this amp is not capable of that. In real life, and with the components involved, it will not happen.

Oh for crying out loud..... you can't even read a simple graph? Here's the transistor's power curve for everyone to see:

http://www.icehouse.net/wirenut/2879curv.jpg

Let's say you start with a 4 watt carrier (multiply all the numbers in the graph by 2 since you are using two transistors). The transistors will amplify that carrier to 120 watts. Now modulate the carrier 100% so your input power is 16 watts PEP. If the response was linear then the output power would be 4 * 120 watts, or 480 watts. Alas, the graph says different. VERY different. Your output power is only about 250 watts, or about HALF of your fabricated PEP figures. Crank up the supply voltage and you MIGHT reach 400, but then you have some real power dissipation problems that I pointed out in the other post and you are ignoring, just like every other post where I have proven you both wrong and ignorant.... "LOL"!!!

You seem to have it mostly covered, so I have only a couple more suggestions...

The power cord has to run through a hole you drilled in the firewall.
If you snag the heater core, you have to go back to CB for three more years. If you forget to use a rubber grommet and the cord shorts out, add another year.

The antennas are installed with a drill, not a magnet or a clamp. If you use a magnet mount, then drill a hole next to it for the coax cable, you're only half-way to hamdom.

If your car doesn't veer at speeds over 35mph, your antennas aren't big enough. Get the BIG Hustler coils and drill a 3/8" hole in a 16" pizza pan for higher Q. But don't use an NMO mount for this setup.

ROTFL! And after being completely humiliated in public because he can't read a simple x-y graph, it now gets worse because he didn't even go back to check his OWN graph:

He measured (or so he claims) his "1dB compression point" with an unmodulated carrier. An unmodulated carrier is the same as PEP (as well as CW). He doesn't even realize that his 129 watt "measurement" is the very same "compression point" that he must use to rate SSB power. So it's 129 watts PEP @ 1dB compression, not 322 watts!

So where did he get 322 watts? You know he didn't measure it or he would have used the actual measurement the first time. Well, this shouldn't come as a big suprise, but 322 watts is ALMOST EXACTLY 2dB down from his original fish-story of 516 watts.

So much for his 'revised' power rating..... "LOL"!!!

Hey Brian.....

Since the transistors you are using are rated for a typical gain of 15.2dB, and you are using two of them, why is your amp rated for only 15dB instead of 18.2dB?

And at 18.2dB, if you shove in a typical 4 watt carrier from a CB, doesn't that put your AM "RMS" output about 264 watts? (And your PEP output at 1056 watts?)

Now assuming you have a magical amp that can achieve 55% efficiency irrespective of the 35% collector efficiency of the transistor, when you 100% modulate this 264 watt carrier (giving an AVERAGE power 396 watts), doesn't that mean you are going to be drawing 720 watts from your power supply?

Just in case I missed something in 3rd-grade math you better check my work here: 720 watts / 15 volts = 48 amps. You also have a base-bias current of 1 amp for each transistor, so 48 + 2 = 50 amps. Right?

But who uses a 15 volt power supply? Heck, we'll use the more common automotive standard of 13.8 volts. So 720 / 13.8 = 52.2 amps, plus 2 amps = 54.2 amps.

HOLD ON A SEC.... Your amp only has a 30 amp fuse!!!

So after I get this all hooked up, wired directly to my battery and everything, plug in my favorite little 4-watt CB, this amp is going to blow a fuse every time I yell "A-U-D-I-O" into the mic.

Ok, I bypass the fuse and switch my CB on SSB with 12 watts PEP. What's going to melt first -- the transistors or the power leads?

And you call this a "High Reliability Design"....."LOL"!!!

And his PEP rating is now EXACTLY 2dB down from his original PEP rating of 516 watts. Interesting.

I've done that with the neighbor's fence before. In fact I made it the antenna for my first shortwave radio. Worked fine for me. The only problem was whenever they opened the gate I would have to retune.

Order of the Holey Sockpuppet

A special Kookternity comprised of those most prolific in the art of, albeit thinly, disguising their net.presence behind whatever nose and glasses they can concoct. A Kook Art that came into its own, and received its name, from the work of the late purveyor to the cotton-bound masses, Earl Curley.

On account of his morphing sock-puppetry in Google and talking to his socks as though they were other posters (in spite of the unlikely scenario that a bunch of people in Reston, Virginia have unilaterally chosen to post to RRAP, using only nyms which lame other regulars in that same group, and all of them replyable, at that, since they are always posted through Google), I, Snarky, do hereby nominate for the Order of the Holey Sockpuppet: the poster known as "Wabbit".

Seconds?

He continually spammed this group a few years ago after his brain short circuited from his faulty arguments. The result back then as it probably will be here is that his ISP will boot him.

Well that doesn't make sense -- why use two transistors in an amp that can be built with one? Aren't you the one that's always worried about it being too expensive?

>>HOLD ON A SEC.... Your amp only has a 30 amp fuse!!!

I took that into account, Pouting Brian. That's why I calculated AVERAGE power and not PEAK (PEP) power, just like it was outlined in your favorite educational website.

>>Ok, I bypass the fuse and switch my CB on SSB with 12 watts PEP.

Good comeback, Pouting Brian..... I feel like I have been dissed by the best...."LOL"!!!

>>And you call this a "High Reliability Design"....."LOL"!!!
>Where's your amp, Frank?

That's what it all boils down to with you, isn't it?

You get up on the stage and sing like a rutting moose. When you are done, the audience stops grimmacing and takes their fingers out of their ears, and they begin their criticism. You can't take it so you try to turn your lack of ability onto them by saying, "Let's hear YOU sing." A classic 'sour grapes' response.

You built an amp without any engineering ability and it shows. If you don't like the criticism, get off the stage. Otherwise, get ready for the rotten tomatos because there are plenty more things I can pick apart about your amp from your spec sheet..... for example, did you know that total harmonic distortion can be calculated from an amp's nonlinear response? And guess what: you posted the curve!

So get ready for round 2....."LOL"!!!

No, you're a timid, anonymous Wabbit, and it doesn't really matter who you are. "The anonymous homophobe from Reston, VA" pretty much sums it up.

Unfortunatly this happens just about everywhere on CB Radio hence why I dont use it anymore.

Where I live, your best to leave it switched off, unless you want to hear wanna-be police officers playing sirens and CFA pager tones.
You would probably get a more decent conversation with commercial users on CB Radio here.

Mark is overly sensitive about bloody farts. Forgive him. He has more than once gone on record in these newsgroups by telling us that he has a hemorrhoid problem and, get this....uses beer to give himself enemas. He has not told us just HOW he introduces the beer into his anus, so your guess is as good as mine. He claims that the beer enema lessens the pain, but I suspect it is most likely a cheap and semi-perverted means of getting a buzz going.

Groan! Don't flatter yourself, Mark. Stagger Lee speaks and writes extremely well. There is no way even a fool such as Wiseman would EVER think you were Stagger Lee. You "think he may even have", but you can't quote when, if ever, this happened. This is mere wishful thinking on your part.

sigh

back to what I've said many times before...

as long as the CB community don't give a toss about what rules they break, it will remain open season for the morons..

CB is a "self regulating" band which means it is within the power of the users to make a difference and clean up the band, or just let it go to the shithouse like it is... While ever there remains the attitude of "I can run whatever power levels I want" and "who gives a shit anyway nobody cares" this is the kind of behaviour you will get on CB.. morons...

But, it's what the CBers seem to want to happen, isn't it! I mean, mention the rules on here and they shout you down with a heap of abuse, yet when it comes to them not being able to have a conversation we get this whole big whinge about how noby ever does anything and the government don't care..

well people, this is the bed you have all made for yourselves - lie in it and shut the hell up, OR, start to change your attitudes and clean the band up! It's all within the power of the users, so when your local repeater is blocked just remember that the "it's not my problem" or "who cares" attitude is exactly what keeps it blocked.....

In the United States, suffrage is determined by the individual states, not federally. There is no national "right to vote". The states and the people have changed the U.S. Constitution five times to disallow states from limiting suffrage, thereby expanding it.

perhaps you should change that to "Nice little story about a couple of CBer's who took matters just a bit too far".

1. they were not hams in any way, shape or form (you can check for their names on qrz or the fcc database to verify that)
2. they got in an argument on CB radio
3. they shot each other in a public place (A duel).

end of report.

where in that story was ham radio (or the no-code debate) ever mentioned?

Be contrite when you recant your false apologies, but only in a half-assed way!

1816. Galaxy DX99V, is it legal or illegal?

Newsgroup: rec.radio.cb

Hi Everyone,

My brother recently purchased a Galaxy DX99V radio from a local pawn shop for $100, and just looking for a CB radio to take over the road we found this radio to be advertised as a 10m radio for ham operators (which I am licensed, he is not), but it also does 11m for CB.

I'm still completely green with radios (been licensed for just 6 weeks now), but it's my understanding that such a radio would be illegal. If a device is type accepted for CB frequenies on 11m it would not legally be able to transmit on 10m ham frequencies.

After reading some ads on this radio I'm seeing it advertised as a 10m amateur radio, but looking at it it's obviously geared for CB radio folks. I also can't see any sign that it's type accepted by the FCC. With all this I'm guessing it's an illegal radio, but just thought I'd ask if anyone can verify this.

We did test it, and yes, it can transmit on the CB channels amoung others.

Thanks --

Alex

alex,
it doesn't matter.....the fcc don't really care. the robot voice is really cool on that radio. i bought a robot-echo mic for use on my 2 meter moon bounce and it sounds great!

Yes, it is technically illegal for 11 meters. That being said, just stay between channels 1-40 and you'll have no problems.

BWHAHAHAHA Oh? The source of unreliable information cuts and pastes from others and adds a few of his own comments so it appears that the whole article came from him.

Saggytits Lee steps on his own tiny dick when he tried to correct somebody else's English use first by saying one "operates" a dictionary instead of reading it, then uses "things" instead of "thinks" in <jewish.reggae.roger@houston-hunks.com>:

"Translation: Woger can't figure out how to operate a dictionary, let alone correct someone else's language.But that's not surprising from someone who things that..."

Saggytits Lee manages to fumble again when he tried to backpedal on his improper use of words by once again mangling the sentence in reply <gweasy.long.hair@houston-hunks.com>:

"The word "operate" can be a synonym "use" in certain contexts"

Fuckup Stagger Lee <SLee@houston-hunks.com> proves he's as ignorant of music as he is in everything else when he utters the following stupidity in <k8mn.is.a.god@houston-hunks.com>:

"Eric Clapton even wrote a song about Leila!"

Staggering Drunk Lee, the "Pulitzer prize award-winning writer" slobbered the following Ebonics in <9a56ue$hi...@dosa.alt.net>:
"I hope yourself takes the advice you are giving to yourself."

Of, course, Arf! Oaf! can't write any better either:

"Arf! Arf!" <DoggieD...@Liberalz.com> the ill-educated spelling champ fucks up again

One dead, one arrested after CB radio argument at Vancouver mall

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) -- A Vancouver man was shot to death Saturday in the parking lot of Westfield Vancouver mall following an argument over citizens band radio.

Kenneth Eichhorn, 47, died after surgery at Southwest Washington Medical Center, police said Saturday. Jon William Loveless, 44, also of Vancouver, was arrested for investigation of second-degree murder in the shooting.

Police responded about 1:30 a.m. Saturday to reports of multiple shots fired in the mall parking lot. Officers found the wounded Eichhorn in his pickup truck.

Loveless called 911 a short time later, reporting that he had been involved in a shooting. He was being held without bail in the Clark County Jail.

The two men apparently did not know each other, but got into an argument over CB radio before they met at the mall. Both men were armed, police said. The nature of the disagreement was not disclosed.

Later Saturday, CB users were still talking about the early-morning argument between "Ken" and "Brander."

Longtime CB user Noel Perkins, 41, of Vancouver said he often hears arguments over the radio. "It's part of the game," said Perkins, whose CB handle is Snakebite. "Some people take it seriously, some people don't."

Hi,.... I'm Slow Code..... I like being (sexually) abused by men and suffer for them..... I'm really submissive and kinky! Please contact me via this link. http://alt.com/go/g2634 You'll find more pictures and e-mailadresses here http://alt.com/go/g2634

I really like harsh pain inflicted on me, but can't find anyone extreme enough. Therefore travelling is not a problem for me, torture me on a hotelroom, or any other place will do fine! You'll find more pictures and e-mailadresses here http://alt.com/go/g263

You can piss on me if you want to and fuck me at will. If I don't service you enough, just hurt me till I'll obey.

I have NO financial interests at all.

If we raise the CW speed to 20 WPM for all classes including the Tech class, hams will tend to study the theory more while they build up their code skill and they will understand the theory better and won't need to ask silly questions. So increasing the speed requirement will get us better & smarter hams.

Lazy people that don't want to learn anything will stay on CB and die in shoot-outs with each other in shopping mall parking lots which will help clean up the CB band. To me it looks like a Win Win situation. What do you think?

It's funny, the liberal democrat candidates commit fraud busing voters around from polling place to polling place to try and get elected. The tell them who to vote for at each polling place. The only thing they don't do is to tell them how to properly cast a vote so it can be counted.
LOL! It must really suck to be stupid and a liberal.

Great! Let's increase the CW requirement to something that you cannot copy and improve amateur radio by an infinite amount.

WRONG! The radio IS illegal and especially illegal to use on 11 Meters. This radio appears on FCC's Office of Technology list of non-certified radios and is not to be used as a CB.

FCC HAS been citing people for using "export" radios, has been after truckers operating ON 10 Meters without license, AND has cited/fined a number of CB dealers and truck stops for selling them. They include Pilot Travel Centers ($90,000 settlement), Love's Travel Stops ($25,000), TA, Flying J, and others. Flying J will likely be getting a fine over the Cobra 150 and 200 series "export" radios soon. Trucking companies include, UPS,

FedEx, Quality Carriers, Superior Carriers, Tidewater Transit, United Van Lines, JW Randolph, Melton Truck Lines, Cardinal Express, a whole list with MORE pending. Individuals in Texas and Oklahoma have been warned to stop operating with "export" (10 Meter) radios and excessive power. So, yes, FCC DOES care and intends to stop the theft of the 10 Meter band by unlicense people and the sales of uncertified "CB" radios. You might get away with it, you might not.

They accomplish this task by contracting Haliburtian to pile up dead US solders to reach the light bulb made by GE. Due to this huge expense, they pass more tax cuts for rich republicans so nobody (who counts) is hurt financially. Everybody's a winner! Right?

Hear Ye!
Now comes Woger Wabbit, chastising and cajoling others for their spelling gaffes. To quote "Wabbit", "Oh, the irony."
Below are actual misspellings garnered from Woger Wabbit's comments over the last two years. None are embellished upon save for the author's comments.
Obviously, Wabbit doesn't know how to operate a dictionary.
(Step on in "operating" a dictionary, Wabbit...open the darned thing!)

"sweallow" West Virginia phonics.

"srarrions". Your guess is as good as mine on this one.

"aboiut". Well, it's about "tiome".

"Sluprs"...only Rogie knows what this means.
"Travelled"...a Rogerism, replete with ignorance.
"Postss"...pssst...Roger..that should be Posts.
"Defgenerate"...well, it's Roger's word...
"Faity"...he meant to say Fairy, but you know Roger.

"Ghet" Get a load of Curtain Boy!
"Distribiution"...Roger likes using phonics.
"Biotch"...he meant Bitch, but his phonics took over again.
"Methjadone"...a West Virginia substitute for Heroin.
"Sumbliminal"...one of Roger's favorites.
"Recepticle"...either of Roger's moist cavaties.
"Cociane"...a West Virginia drug of choice?
"Tiome"...Roger meant to say Time...but his fingers were numb.
"Beraking"...no definition. Could mean 'beraking' the leaves,
"Amny"...he meant 'any',
"Nlay"...a town in Maylaysia? Vermont?
"Al;ong"...only Wussman knows what this means.
"Becasu"...well, becasu Roger is not the brightest bulb on the tree.
"Seperation". Why? Because Roger cannot "seperate" from his mommie!
"Sisnce" He meant Since, but his pudgy little fingers slipped off the keys.
"gnetically" What?
"provce" (prove?)
"Piuzza" (West Virginia Pizza)
"Schol" (school?)
"strill" (still?)
"shoitgun" 12 ga or 20 ga?
"Snoip" (How they spell "snip" in Glen Dale)
"Maturbater". Wiseman does it all the time, he just can't spell it.(leaves a sticky residue on his right hand)
"Coskscuking". It's a Roger thing, as in Lavender Lads.

"Waddleing". Only in Glen Dale, eh?
"Spaeaking". Curtain Boy did this after his second retest.

" Stgop" Roger's version of Stop.

"Fahter's" He meant Father's Day.

"fserting"..would that be festering?

"poists". Roger meant "posts".

"snadwich" As in peanut butter and jelly?

"regualr" Glen Dale rendition of "regular".

"aftrer" After? Aftrer what?

"soory". Sorry Roger fucks up again.

"didnb't" He didn't?

"whoile". He ate the whoile thing?

"Woamn" He's hooked on West Virginia phonics, all right.

"prrof" And he kin prove it, too.

"beforfe" Was that before he lurned to spell?

"yoiuy" Roger's version of "y'all".

"illerate" Only illiterate Roger can spell like this.

"haeart" Aw, how heartless of me to laugh!

"valule" Roger has no values. No wonder he can't spell it.

"proch" Doesn't everyone have one on their house?

"inmstitution" Where Roger's mom put him in June 1999.

"timne" It's Howdy Doody time?

"whgo" What? Who dat?

"gnetically" Only Roger knows what this one means.

"crfy" Like, cry, Roger, cry.

"stutrtering" Some stutter, Wiseman stutrters.

"Whjere" Where is Curtain Boy?

"Webiste" That's Website to the rest of us.

"Youire" Your? You're? Who knows.

"fiored" As in fired?

"Parety" Roger gave a party once. Nobody came.

"Bouynce" Bounce?

"Varification" Verifiable mental case.

"Probelms" Poor Rogie.has many problems of the mental sort.

"Partricipate" Oh, DUH!!!!

"Cryed" Gee, Wogie..cry me a river.you dolt!

"Stoick" What a dork. His old 386 has no spell check program.

"Partiall" More WV Phonics, I see.

"Obsucred" Either obscured or Rogie has "sucre" on his mind.

"Infinate" Stupid. Think finite, Rogie.

"Sustinance" As in Sustenance?

"Juvinile". This is the way Roger likes his boys.

"Piut" Put it where, Rogie?

"Toyus". "Toyus R Us?

"Diminuative". Roger's height.

"Definitely" Definitely

"Percriptions" Say what?

"Credibiliy" More Glen Dale intellect.

"Thsoe" Yet another Glen Dale gaffe.

Heck. Maybe The Slickster and Janet could have used Halliburton to rebuild the World Trade Center the first time it was bombed. Or, and get this...how about if Halliburton would have rebuilt the USS Cole? Or the Marine barracks in Lebanon?
I bet a little bit of that Halliburton money could have easily rebuilt the Waco compound that Reno turned into a crematory...
But wait! Clinton was far too busy granting amnesty to home-grown terrorists (get that Hillary vote) while spending monies given him from Communist China.
And Clinton's gal, the Atty. General who advocated masturbation? Jocylen? Didn't she go obscure right after her son was arrested for drug sales?

Oh, and not let us forget Roger Clinton, the half-brother druggie supreme who snorted more Cocaine than a vacuum sweeper.

And last, but most importantly. 95% of the wealthiest people in this country pay 80% of the taxes gathered. The low earners, the ones you support, pay a pittance compared to the rich. Your claim is pure Democrat poppycock.

Yeah, those taxes are really putting the pinch on the well-to-do. We should relieve the burden on the rich by sending IRS agents out on the streets to shake down the homeless and senior citizens, huh?

Yeah, those taxes are really putting the pinch on the well-to-do. We should relieve the burden on the rich by sending IRS agents out on the streets to shake down the homeless and senior citizens, huh?

The Homeless are not paying taxes. WE are paying for their medical care. We,
as in ME!
And I dare you to show me a single instance of the IRS "shaking down" the homeless. Name ONE instance and back it up with facts.
Show me where the IRS is attacking senior citizens. Seems to me it was Al
Gore who increased the taxes on Social Security...monies that our Senior Citizens rely on to live from day to day.
It was Al Gore who placed a "fee" on everybody's phone bills and wouldn't exempt the Seniors.

Blow a goat? How about if you tell the truth?

A poor 'hack-and-attack' interpretation. Read the entire quote: "We should relieve the burden on the rich by sending IRS agents out on the streets to shake down the homeless and senior citizens, huh?"

Yes, and "poppycock" is so much more chic.

I didn't invent civilization. If you want to abandon it, that's up to you. Just remember that benefits don't come without responsibilities.

I don't want to give them my tax dollars any more than you do. I would much rather they earn their own livings and make contributions to society like the rest of us. But not all of them are malingerers; many of them have legitimate reasons for not being productive members of society. The most common reasons are psychological and emotional dysfunction, so I am very much in favor of providing mental health treatment for anyone. That's how to attack the cause of a problem (mental health) instead of throwing money at its effects (poverty). Now how does that make me a liberal?

We,

You think you are the only one? Get a clue. Supporting those who have no means to support themselves is one of the costs of living in a civilized society. If that concept evades your understanding, how about a translation from the Big Dummy's Guide to Republican Values:

"Where did I say they did?"

Well, I copied and pasted your comment that, "by sending IRS agents out on the streets to shake down the homeless and senior citizens"

I guess that constitutes you saying "they did".

I don't "need a clue" as that overused trite phrase of yours indicates.
That is what I like about Liberals. Catch phrases such as "get a clue" or, "smell the coffee" are so easy to use.
So..living in a "civilized society", according to you, requires that I support the non-workers? The lazy? The druggies? Since when? According to who? You?
What gives YOU the authority to tell me that I should support the lazy, the unemployed?

Maybe you should get a copy of The Dummies Guide of Mooching.
Liberals are all too quick to "feel sorry" for the lazy, the non-earners but do little to help them. Oh, yeah..you want to give THEM my tax dollars...but to what end?

As most wealthy people incorporate any income over ~$200k, those figures make sense but I still find it had to believe that corporations, millionaires and billionaires get away with sub-$100k tax bills. I guess I'm not one of the wealthy people like you. Go figure...

I guess I'm one of the swing voters now but the reason I no longer respect the republican party has been the worst of two evil philosophy. I have come to realize that I would rather have a prez that gets blow-jobs from 19 or 20 year old girls than a prez that lies about being Christan while behind the curtain, killing people to make other people rich and messing with our freedoms to promote it. There has only been increases of terrorism and WMD making all those arguments bogus.

Giving money to Communist china?!!! The corporations, in moving most all their manufacturing to China in the last 8 years have overwhelmed China with money and they don't know how to spend it fast enough! Makes one wonder who is running the whitehouse?

It will be quite interesting to see if the Democrats get to spend >$100M to investigate Bush just like the republicans did to investigate the Clintons. Perhaps those drunken little daughters escapades will come back to light! LOL

And you don't find the real life example it's based on offensive?

If you had more than two functioning brain cells, you would realize that his post was an allegory for the bogus Iraq "war" and that the Halliburton scandals and the piling up of dead bodies, theirs and ours, is indeed offensive.

I dont doubt that CBers do a thousand times as much public sevice as hams do but it is not the kind of thing that gets news attention. I know when an ice storm hit here it was Cbers that helped my wife. She is a ham but couldnt access the repeater because there were a bunch of hams on there talking about how much ice they got at there house. This sort of thing goes on all the time. Its true that hams are set up better to provide emergency communications but a Cber is more likely to stop and change a tire for you when you cant.

While I do profess to be a Christian, I do get a lot of eyebrows lifted when I tell them that I don't think we are in the last days. I also don't believe in the rature either and that gets a bunch of evangelicals looking at me funny.

I also hate when people the setup webpages and you hae to wait until the whole thing loads to shut off the music because the conrtol is at the bottom.

Yes, Some people are lazy and as long as there is a CW requirement they won't go for a ham license, or upgrade beyond tech. They don't really want to be hams enough to put out an effort to be one, but the ones that go for the CW and written exams really want to be hams, and will stick with the service and will be an important part of keeping it going.

Is this the replacement website for the club located at this site, which still indicates that the club is CLOSED?

Neither the Code NOR Theory tests will weed out the bad radio operator any more than a driving test will weed out the DUIs - OR - the Physical agility, legal and other exams will weed out bad cops. Those tests are only tests of "Proficiency" in the subject matter - NOT - "Mentality". Those tests won't stop the trash.
But those who choose to not learn code will continue to bitch about why they shouldn't. OK, DROP the code.....Next you'll want the "Theory" taken away too. Want to bet?

1991. Love's Travel gets SPANKED

Newsgroup: rec.radio.cb

From: "A.E. 352" <ae352@iwon.com>
Message-ID: <dqzVg.4700$0L1.3893@twister.nyroc.rr.com>
Source record: 224267

The FCC has fined Love's Travel Stops & Country Stores Inc of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, $25,000 for violating the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, by offering for sale non-certified Citizens Band (CB) transceivers. The Forfeiture Order (NoF) <http://hraunfoss.fcc.gov/edocs_public/attachmatch/DA-06-1936A1.pdf> released September 29 recounts a history of alleged violations dating back to 2001, when the Commission issued the first of seven citations to Love's for marketing non-certified CB transceivers. All CB transmitting equipment must first receive FCC certification before it can be marketed or sold in the US.

"Based on the evidence before us, we find that Love's willfully and repeatedly violated Section 302(b) of the Act and Section 2.803(a) of the rules by offering for sale non-certified CB transmitters on three instances -- two on February 23, 2005, and one on February 25, 2005," said the NoF, signed by the FCC Enforcement Bureau's South Central Region Director Dennis P. Carlton. The FCC said that between March 2004 and January 2005, Enforcement Bureau field agents, following up on complaints, visited 10 Love's retail outlets in Oklahoma, Texas, Arizona and California. "At these locations, the stores displayed and offered for sale various models of non-certified CB transceivers marketed as ARS [Amateur Radio Service] transmitters," the FCC NoF noted.

According to the NoF, Love's attorney had argued that because the radios in question were marketed as Amateur Radio equipment and "as sold" operate only on the amateur bands, the transceivers fell under the FCC's Part 97 Amateur Radio Service rules. The FCC pointed out, however, that its Office of Engineering and Technology (OET) had specifically tested the two Galaxy models in question (DX99V and DX33HML) and found both to be "dual-use" Amateur Radio and CB transmitters.

"Each of the models could be modified to allow transmit capabilities on CB frequencies," the FCC said in the NoF. In 1999, the OET clarified that ARS transceivers that have "a built-in capability to operate on CB frequencies and can easily be altered to activate that capability, such as by moving or removing a jumper plug or cutting a single wire" fall under the FCC's definition of a CB transmitter.

"We conclude that seven citations were more than sufficient to provide Love's actual notice that marketing this equipment is unlawful and that continued violations could make Love's liable for severe sanctions," the FCC said.

The Love's case was reminiscent of other FCC enforcement proceedings alleging marketing of uncertified CB transceivers labeled as Amateur Radio gear, including one against Pilot Travel Centers LLC that could have cost the company $125,000 in fines. That case ended last May with a consent decree. While Pilot agreed to make "a voluntary contribution" of $90,000 to the US Treasury "without further protest or recourse," it did not admit to any wrongdoing.

In June, the FCC affirmed a $7000 fine on TravelCenters of America in Troutdale, Oregon, for marketing uncertified CB transceivers as 10-meter Amateur Radio transceivers. The FCC turned away TravelCenters' argument that the transceivers in question were not CB transceivers, which require FCC certification, but Amateur Radio transceivers, which do not.

After being on hiatus for a few years, the American Eagle Single-Sideband CB'ers Club is now accepting new members! A fella named Eric stepped-in and fired the ol' club back up. So, if you'd like to join, just go to http://americaneaglessbcbersclub.ericextreme.com/joinform/forms/form1.html and fill-in the application. The URL for the American Eagle Single-Sideband CB'ers Club is http://americaneaglessbcbersclub.ericextreme.com/Home.html
And YES Frank, you can join too. Put your vast knowledge to work, instead of just being a Newsgroup troll. ;)

I used to talk to those guys in the mid 90's which may not seem out of the ordinary but they are about 80-100 miles north. It helps to have a PDL II and located hard on the Long Island Sound 130' up. Not saying 5/9 but good enough for a QSO.

You don't need to know my callsign, all you need to know is that CW makes for more skilled amateurs and that's why we need to retain the requirement. CW also works a little as a filter to keep the sick, lame and Lazy off HF. We need to bring back the CW requirement for Techs so we can raise the intelligence level of conversations on the repeaters.

To learn the technical TRUTH about CB Radio without all the hype from people who are just plain ignorant, check out the following books from CBC International. They're selling right now at a big discounts on our EBAY & AMAZON stores too.

Check it out!

To see exactly what these books look like, plus all the specific, chapter-by-chapter details, see our Web at:

www.cbcintl.com

BOOK #1: THE "SCREWDRIVER EXPERT'S" GUIDE To Peaking Out & Repairing CB Radios. List $25. The most popular "big dummy's" guide ever published on do-it-yourself CB repairs & modifications. Covers peaking of receivers, transmitters, modulation, mike problems, antenna & SWR problems, detailed frequency modifications for both crystal & PLL radios. Loaded with charts, illustrations, and specific instructions for most brands including the new export models. This latest edition also covers slider and broadbanding tricks, FM conversions, and much more!

BOOK #2: THE CB PLL DATA BOOK. List $20. The only complete reference source on CB PLL synthesizer circuits ever published! Detailed PLL theory explained in layman's terms. How they work, and how to modify them for many more channels. Includes specific PLL block mixing diagrams, truth charts, & IC pin function diagrams for nearly every PLL chip ever used. Covers all the most popular U.S. & export chassis, with specific listings of all models using the chip.

BOOK #3: UNDERSTANDING & REPAIRING CB RADIOS. List $42. Giant 370-page technical book for the professional repairman. Picks up where the "SCREWDRIVER EXPERT'S" GUIDE leaves off. Includes circuit descriptions & troubleshooting guide for 23- & 40-Ch., crystal & PLL, solid-state & tube, AM, FM, SSB, CW, American & export models. Covers test equipment (& where to find it), transistor basics, synthesizers, receivers, transmitters, power supplies, T/R switching, antennas, interference, parts & accessory sources. Over 350 illustrations including schematics, charts, and photos. Huge subject index also lets you look up repairs by symptoms. This is "must" reading for any serious CB technician!

The theory questions even the extra exam is not that difficult. A decent electronics tech with an AA degree can master that test. In fact the tests are so dummied down that just about anyone that has the ability read and comprehend can pass them with the minimal of coaching. So if you think so highly your "Theory" tests then I hate to burst your bubble.

Why should proficiency in one means of communication hender operation in another? I tend to think that those that are very proficient with morse code tend to spend more of their time with that mode of communication. Why should there be a limitation on other modes that do not wish to use that mode? Most hams learn morse code and then forget it. I have no issue with showing proficiency in a means of communication to get priviledges. I have no issues with showing a proficiency with "theory" as a means of priviledges.

The thing here is usage of the airwaves is a priviledge and not a right. So what ever the government cares to do in this avenue is fine with me. I will take advantage of what ever they offer me.

James,

Rethink what I wrote. I'm not claiming the tests are "all that"..... You are right, they ARE dummied down and NO, you do NOT need an AA degree to pass the Extra. Just some diligent studying. I was merely saying NEITHER test will eliminate the crap - for starters. BUT those who "are" whining about the code - if they get their wish, will then want the written exam dropped too. In other words - FREE - uninhibited passage. IF we gave Drs', Lawyers, Drivers, Pilots and other licenses away like some want the Ham licenses handed out, where would we be? Ham radio may not be all that, but it is what it is. Anything more stripped away from it - and it won't be worth having.

"I" had to learn the code, it really is no big deal. Do I use it? Not much, but I'm still glad I learned it. It was a matter of self discipline. Hey, drop the code......Who am "I" to force it down anyone's throat? That isn't my aim or argument. Again - you're going to see the push for the rest to be dropped too - some just aren't satisfied. Mark my words.

duely marked but exactly who do you think is going to push for this?

personaly I will push to cponsolate down the number of classes which will reduce the number of tests of course and since there will not be as amny defferent set of band edges the number of question wiull certainly drop further

but the only people claiming the written test will are those insistign
the code test should should not die

I read your post and understood it. My beleifs is that those that will complain about a "theory" test are those that want the license handed to them. They don't want any kind of test. Unless the government does that, I still hold that some form of written test is applicable.

I learned enough code and then I never touched a key again. Made two contacts total via morse code. Never cared for it and never intend to use it. At the time my interests were more in VHF/UHF anyways. HF was to much like CB. He who had the biggest amp and antenna was heard.
VHF/UHF systems require more than a big amp and a big antenna.

I whined about the code requirements and still do. But I also understand, that what ever the government determines as the standard for obtain levels oflicensing are the rules that I ahve to play with.
As I stated I have no issues with levels of "theory". That part to me is easier to learn.

You raise some good points Jim. That's why I've always proposed the following licensing changes:

1: No more automatic renewals. Individuals must retest and pass all elements required for their license class.

2: The passing score for written exams needs to be raised to 85%.

3: Code elements should be 13 wpm for General, and 20 wpm for Extra.

4: Make the no-code license one year non-renewable.

Why retest knowledge? Not necessary unless your intention is to reduce the ranks of the amatuer radio service. Few if any government priviledges require constant retesting for renewal. Your thinking is not logical.Besides it increases the government and costs. The government would then be forced to charge for licensing.

>+++2: The passing score for written exams needs to be raised to 85%.

Again 70% is sufficient. Raising to the limit you suggest is more a weed out than anything else.

>+++3: Code elements should be 13 wpm for General, and 20 wpm for Extra.
>+++

The ITU no longer requires CW for any of its commercial services. Why do you stillinsist on such high levels. Again your motive appears to be more selective as to who may be granted a license.

>+++4: Make the no-code license one year non-renewable.

Why? when this class already has very strong restrictive priviledges.
This would not be the incentive to upgrade to a higher license. Some maybe satisfied with the priviledges of this class and making it a one year nonrenewable will not be the incentice to an upgrade path.
Instead it will be another step in restricting any growth in the amature radiio service. Then again if you prefer dwindling numbers, go ahead. Radio and its associated costs can not compete with the internet. If I want to talk to some one in Australia it is now far easier to use IRC or other messaging programs in conjuction with the internet. If you intend to further restrict the amature service to nothing more than a "good ole boys club", then you yourself have become the problem.

Fuck the code only shit. Why should that be the only element? Why not make all amateurs retest in ALL modes, at all frequencies, et al. And what the hell, while we're at it, let's just go ahead and make it yearly. Don't let the old geezers off so easily. When a new mode is adopted, or allowed, make those bastards show proficiency there as well. That should just about do the ARS in. Why should you have it your way, SC?

Well said. SC and his ilk are what is wrong with the ARS today. But hell, who knows when I will need morse to facilitate my rescue from a capsized cruise ship in the Gulf of Mexico. I will be the one! No one will know there are really people inside the ship, unless of course, I pound the hammer I had with me on the inside of the hull. And to boot, the Coast Guard no longer teaches morse, so hopefully SC will be there to copy.

Hello A.E. 352:

Yeah that was kind of wild, we got skip from all over the place. I heard the usual from all over the states, the guy in Tonga, and heard guys coming back to 357 who use to be on Easter Is.

Ok maybe I am off base here, or got the wrong guy.

The guy I am thinking about is in Ridgecrest Ca, and I believe he may have moved away. But the Mojave Desert includes California, Nevada, Arizona, and Utah. And in some places they even spell Mojave different. Like Mohave, spelling no big deal.

Find out where this guy is, I am thinking just outside the Metropolis of Barstow.

Jay in the Great Mojave Desert, just down the road ah ways from the fillin ststion.

Could you pass all the tests again today, or would you have to study a little first? My arguement has always been for the quality of licensees, not the quantity of them.

Requiring an 85% passing score means more study before taking the exams, which translate to a better understanding of the material. My arguement has always been for the quality of licensees, not the quantity of them.

Hams should be skillfull. Proficency at CW gives hams a way to communicate, when no other way might be possible.

Requiring future study in order to continue to be licensed will make for more knowledgable hams. They will be assets. A national resource. My arguement has always been for the quality of licensees, not the quantity of them.

Everyone is welcome in the "good-ole-boy" club if they're not lazy and are willing to learn. If not, there's always CB for them. My arguement has always been for the quality of licensees, not the quantity of them.

Having to work a little to get/gain something gives a little sense of pride in the accomplishment and you appreciate it and take care of it. It's valuable.

Getting handed something for nothing cheapens it. Don't cheapen ham radio. Rigs don't come with kill-filters to notch out bad ops and lids, so let's support policy that minimizes the number of lids on the bands.

Not for nothing, Brian. I don't care if you are truthful or lying, about the specs. I don't care if you sell 1 or 100,000 of them. But one thing is clear. Even though you say the amp is is for HF operation, you have all but admitted that you are selling it as a CB linear, by advertising it in this newsgroup. The problem is that you put it all in black and white, in a public forum, and you cannot retract any of it. So even if the FCC wanted to be bothered and wanted to shut you down, they clearly have enough printed evidence that you fully intented to sell this to CBer's. Otherwise, you should have never posted it here. I'm sorry, but I don't understand that kind of logic.

He could have sold a ton of them on ebay, as a 10 meter amp. Instead, he opened

It's OK if you keep your janitor job in the mean time, Griffey. Hey you almost share the same name of one of my most effective surface insect controls for everyday turf pests such as chinch bug or webworm..small word eh? <talstar>

I bought $17k of that particular control product this year...just imagine what the mark-up is on that.

That would buy a lot of illegal cb amplifier transistors eh?

The amp is generally of little use for amateur radio as it is so band limited. Not even really good for a low power transceiver to drive except for 12 and 10 meter operations. Now if the amp were more broad banded and included post filters, he might then have a better chance of selling them to the amateur market.

Clearly his intentions are not for the amateur radio market but instead for the CB market.

Washington, D.C.:

In an early morning press conference today, President Bush announced plans to seek MLB sanctions against the San Francisco Giants in order to prevent another airplane from crashing into a building.

Almost immediately critics argued that it was a New York Yankee at the controls of the plane, not a San Francisco Giant.

When asked why he is demanding pre-emptive measures against the team, Bush purported that the intelligence community has "hard evidence that at least one San Francisco player has a pilot license," and that such a crash in the future is "...imminent. It's a slam-dunk."

Secretary of State Rice also responded to the critics by saying, "We can't wait until our fears are confirmed in the shadow of a mushroom cloud. It's important that we remain vigilant against this new threat."

White House Press Secretary Tony Snow responded to reporters questions after yesterday's crash, stating that Vice-President Cheney was moved to an undisclosded "secure location".

When asked if the Secret Service if the Secret Service was "stretched too thin" to protect the President, he affirmed that he had "no reason to believe they are busy doing anything else", seemingly unaware of last night's incident in Texas where a standoff occured between the Secret Service and a madman that was holed up in the Texas Ranger's dugout with a shotgun.

House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi of San Francisco held a press conference shortly after President Bush's announcement, alleging that his plan is a "fear-and-smear" tactic to gain Republican support just prior to the mid-term elections.

Presidential hopefull Senator John McCain was unavailable for comment, although a press release from his office claims that the crash was "all Clinton's fault".

Also unavailable for comment was House Speaker Dennis Hastert. Media members outside his home in Illinois report someone yelling out his window, "I didn't know anything! I won't resign!"

TEH WAY OF THE K00K
Never learn from your mistakes.
Always practice your mistakes; you may get them right.
Always pick on those smarter and tougher than you.
Always believe that only you know the TRVTH.
Never allow logic or reason get in the way of a good k00k.
When being overwhelmed by logic and reason: k00ksuit!
If you are going to be wrong, do it at the top of your lungs.
When caught in a lie: LIE!
When in doubt: Order the Crab Won Ton
Plagiarism is your friend. Use it.
Whenever contradicted; morph, start calling people names, and make false accusations. Include the children of your target in your allegations, even if they don't have any.
(06-Jun-05) When nobody else will listen, post to your own fan group.
(06-Jun-05) Obviously, since you have your own fan group, this must mean that you have fans. Post prolifically to your fan group - you wouldn't want to disappoint them!

(10-May-2005)Everyone reads usenet. Approval here means approval everywhere.
Post numerous blank posts, or posts containing only a message id.
Post numerous copy&paste web articles from crackerpot websites.
Never forget to call kookologists "k00ks."
If there are several, call them "sockpuppets" too
When all else fails, accuse various and sundry kookologists of e-mailing viruses to you. This is a sure-fire method of garnering sympathy and ensuring that the General Public will always see things your way. An especially effective sub-strategy here is to accuse them of infecting you with the 'Sasser' worm via e-mail.
Quote notorious scientists or writers - it makes it look as if they approve the drivel you are writing!
(9-Jul-05) Anytime your computer is infected with a virus, bogged down by spyware, attacked over your internet connection, or otherwise suffers from preventable problems, government agencies are responsible and are trying to silence you and are monitoring your computer files.
Ignore all traffic signs and feel free to trespass, you don't have to obey any rules.
Scare your enemies with lawsuits, police escorts and whines.
Always back up your empty (albeit noisy) threats with phony LARTs, false police reports, and harassing letters to the FBI and other gubbermint agencies.
Be vigilant in your redundancy. The more you repeat yourself, the more likely others will believe you!
If you can't find anyone as crazy as yourself to support you in the flamewars you start with the normal population, create sock puppets and use anonymous remailers that shamelessly hang on every word you write.
(17-Mar-05) When dealing with law enforcement, remember that it is they who have the problem, not you. Be sure to inform them of this at every available opportunity, as they will surely appreciate your constructive criticism. Be sure to make them aware that YOU KNOW YOUR RIGHTS! ("The cops like that, when people know their rights. That way they don't have to read them to you on the way to the station." - George Carlin)
The more your fake personalities adulate you, the more respect you'll get!
When confronted with a reality that you don't like: Announce loudly that you are departing, never to return as long as there's an Internet. Come back in three or four days and claim you were drunk, hacked, abducted by alience, or forged. Alternately you can just not even mention your prior departure, and if anyone asks you about it, either ignore them or respond with something along the lines of "YOUR NOT THE BOSS OF ME! PLONK!" People really know you mean business then.
Always remain clueproof.
(20-Mar-05) Anyone who does not believe that you are the reincarnation of [$DEITY_OR_PROPHET] is obviously an infidel lacking in faith whose soul in in peril of everlasting damnation.
When responding to one line challenges, post paragraphs of rants and screed in response.

Incoherency is not a roadblock to poasting.
Neither is illiteracy.
Delusions poasted often enough become fact.
Claim you will destroy <insert newsfroup> for attacking you.
When spnaked, send cmsg for Fanboi newsfroup(s).
Find your Lame, Use your Lame, Be your Lame!
Post Edit when the TRVTH hurts.
Always sneck the offending newsfroups.
Always poast pictures of yourself so you can be admired in all your k00ky glory.
Always accuse others of the very acts you are guilty of.
Post lots of boasts about your high IQ and incredible talents.
(20-Mar-05) If you repeat a lie often enough, it becomes the truth.
Anybody who fails to understand this is engaged in a deliberate campaign of misinformation and character assassination.
Always <plonk> somebody just before replying the plonkee!
The k00k considers itself the most intelligent person in any conversation, possibly on the planet. Other people are benighted and ignorant, and have been waiting their whole lives for the k00k to rescue them from intellectual darkness.
Write a self-published book and claim it a success. Bonus points for comparing it to "Mein Kampf" and/or the Bible.
Declare yourself equal to a deity of your choice.
Claim that you've come from other planets.
Claim thousands of past lives.
Frothing complaints carry far more weight when you send them from "legal@" some domain.
Nothing strikes terror into the hearts of your detractors more than telling them that you're archiving their messages for possible use in the future.
Never forget that everyone else posting to Usenet is a paid disinformation agent looking to discredit you.
Usenet is governed by US law. If a poster in Romania killfiles you, he's obviously violating your 1st Amendment rights and can be sued.
Every news admin in the world hangs out in NANAU, and they're just dying to nuke the account of that meanyhead who just called you "fucknozzle". Drop 'em a line - that's what they're there for, after all.
AUK will be closed down. Just you wait and see.
They've nuked hundreds of accounts in the name of free speech and yours will be next.
The k00k will, without any trace of irony, lie, manipulate, impersonate, censor, and declare themselves powerful in ways ranging from the ability to have an account shut down to being God Herself, in order to convince people that they are not liars, manipulators, censors, or insane.
Abuse women while telling how many hundreds you've loved. Nevermind that you're one ugly motherfucker and that there were 30,000 femininas that thought you were a scumbag with bad teeth.
Remember that your ko0ky klaims are 'facts', and that 'facts' do not require proof.

Do not neglect to poast your responses to forums that the originator doesn't read. This will make the people in that forum very impressed with how you tear him to shreds without him being able to respond. They like it even better if you are off-topic for that forum.
Keep in mind that lack of evidence supporting your konspiracy theory actually _is_ evidence, of how effective the konspiracy is in hiding.
(06-Oct-05) When spanked, always retreat to the safety of the Ad Hominem.
(04-Aug-2005) When spanked mercilessly for days on end, proving with each poast just what an illiterate and ignorant fool you are, ALWAYS claim ownership of [person(s),froup(s)]. This works on so many levels. It inspires dread in your opponents that they will no longer be able to poast in their home froup and that they will eventually have to pay rent, to name just two.
Any problems with your poasts are the fault of the konspirators, who are trying to stop you from preventing the extinction of humanity.
Konspiracies that are able to subvert whole governments are always unable to silence konspiracy ko0ks.
The entire United States government is willing to spend millions of dollars for the sole purpose of harassing you.
Hollywood is making movies based on your personal life.
Do not consult psychiatrists or other mental health professionals. They are part of the konspiracy, and will sedate you and lock you away and keep you drugged if you tell them the truth.
Numerology and Astrology are respectable sciences and are useful for proving your case.
Everyone is Tim Hill, or David Green, or...
There is a fine line between trolling and kookery. Find that line and cross it repeatedly. When you are killfiled and/or LARTed for net.abuse as a result, claim victory. If you lose multiple accounts, this merely proves that you are indeed a world-class troll, with a black-belt in manipulation.
If you respond to every post someone else makes, they're obsessed. If they respond to less than 1% of your posts, they're even more obsessed.
Publishing people's real names, addresses, and phone numbers when there's no other way for you to come out of a flamewar with any dignity is cool, and proves that you are a master of secret internet information stores, and absolutely not to be fucked with.
Everyone is out to get you. You can put a stop to this by telling everyone that they're out to get you at every available opportunity.
You are the only sane one.
Those that give you a hard time about morally bankrupt things you yourself admit to are just persecutioners of the new inquisition.
Yelling in all caps and cursing at your detractors is debate. Your detractors laughing at you with sarcastic remarks is obvious anger and jealousy.
If doing something results in the loss of your account, legal hassles, or blunt trauma injury, do it again. It always works better the second time.
Asterisks, lots and lots of Asterisks.

Poking holes in kookscreed is stalking, and is a felony.

Always believe that only you know the TRVTH.
Never allow logic or reason get in the way of a good k00k.
When being overwhelmed by logic and reason: k00ksuit!
If you are going to be wrong, do it at the top of your lungs.
When caught in a lie: LIE!
When in doubt: Order the Crab Won Ton
Plagiarism is your friend. Use it.
Whenever contradicted; morph, start calling people names, and make false accusations. Include the children of your target in your allegations, even if they don't have any.
(06-Jun-05) When nobody else will listen, post to your own fan group.
(06-Jun-05) Obviously, since you have your own fan group, this must mean that you have fans. Post prolifically to your fan group - you wouldn't want to disappoint them!
(10-May-2005)Everyone reads usenet. Approval here means approval everywhere.
Post numerous blank posts, or posts containing only a message id.
Post numerous copy&paste web articles from crackerpot websites.
Never forget to call kookologists "k00ks."
If there are several, call them "sockpuppets" too
When all else fails, accuse various and sundry kookologists of e-mailing viruses to you. This is a sure-fire method of garnering sympathy and ensuring that the General Public will always see things your way. An especially effective sub-strategy here is to accuse them of infecting you with the 'Sasser' worm via e-mail.

Quote notorious scientists or writers - it makes it look as if they approve the drivel you are writing!
(9-Jul-05) Anytime your computer is infected with a virus, bogged down by spyware, attacked over your internet connection, or otherwise suffers from preventable problems, government agencies are responsible and are trying to silence you and are monitoring your computer files.
Ignore all traffic signs and feel free to trespass, you don't have to obey any rules.
Scare your enemies with lawsuits, police escorts and whines.
Always back up your empty (albeit noisy) threats with phony LARTs, false police reports, and harassing letters to the FBI and other gubbermint agencies.
Be vigilant in your redundancy. The more you repeat yourself, the more likely others will believe you!
If you can't find anyone as crazy as yourself to support you in the flamewars you start with the normal population, create sock puppets and use anonymous remailers that shamelessly hang on every word you write.
(17-Mar-05) When dealing with law enforcement, remember that it is they who have the problem, not you. Be sure to inform them of this at every available opportunity, as they will surely appreciate your constructive criticism. Be sure to make them aware that YOU KNOW YOUR RIGHTS! ("The cops like that, when people know their rights. That way they don't have to read them to you on the way to the station." - George Carlin)
The more your fake personalities adulate you, the more respect you'll get!
When confronted with a reality that you don't like: Announce loudly that you are departing, never to return as long as there's an Internet. Come back in three or four days and claim you were drunk, hacked, abducted by alience, or forged. Alternately you can just not even mention your prior departure, and if anyone asks you about it, either ignore them or respond with something along the lines of "YOUR NOT THE BOSS OF ME! PLONK!" People really know you mean business then.
Always remain clueproof.
(20-Mar-05) Anyone who does not believe that you are the reincarnation of [$DEITY_OR_PROPHET] is obviously an infidel lacking in faith whose soul in in peril of everlasting damnation.
When responding to one line challenges, post paragraphs of rants and screed in response.
Incoherency is not a roadblock to poasting.
Neither is illiteracy.
Delusions poasted often enough become fact.
Claim you will destroy <insert newsfroup> for attacking you.
When spnaked, send cmsg for Fanboi newsfroup(s).
Find your Lame, Use your Lame, Be your Lame!
Post Edit when the TRVTH hurts.
Always sneck the offending newsfroups.

Always poast pictures of yourself so you can be admired in all your k00ky glory.
Always accuse others of the very acts you are guilty of.
Post lots of boasts about your high IQ and incredible talents.
(20-Mar-05) If you repeat a lie often enough, it becomes the truth. Anybody who fails to understand this is engaged in a deliberate campaign of misinformation and character assassination.
Always <plonk> somebody just before replying the plonkee!
The k00k considers itself the most intelligent person in any conversation, possibly on the planet. Other people are benighted and ignorant, and have been waiting their whole lives for the k00k to rescue them from intellectual darkness.
Write a self-published book and claim it a success. Bonus points for comparing it to "Mein Kampf" and/or the Bible.
Declare yourself equal to a deity of your choice.
Claim that you've come from other planets.
Claim thousands of past lives.
Frothing complaints carry far more weight when you send them from "legal@" some domain.
Nothing strikes terror into the hearts of your detractors more than telling them that you're archiving their messages for possible use in the future.
Never forget that everyone else posting to Usenet is a paid disinformation agent looking to discredit you.
Usenet is governed by US law. If a poster in Romania killfiles you, he's obviously violating your 1st Amendment rights and can be sued.
Every news admin in the world hangs out in NANAU, and they're just dying to nuke the account of that meanyhead who just called you "fucknozzle". Drop 'em a line - that's what they're there for, after all.
AUK will be closed down. Just you wait and see.
They've nuked hundreds of accounts in the name of free speech and yours will be next.
The k00k will, without any trace of irony, lie, manipulate, impersonate, censor, and declare themselves powerful in ways ranging from the ability to have an account shut down to being God Herself, in order to convince people that they are not liars, manipulators, censors, or insane.
Abuse women while telling how many hundreds you've loved. Nevermind that you're one ugly motherfucker and that there were 30,000 femininas that thought you were a scumbag with bad teeth.
Remember that your ko0ky klaims are 'facts', and that 'facts' do not require proof.
Do not neglect to poast your responses to forums that the originator doesn't read. This will make the people in that forum very impressed with how you tear him to shreds without him being able to respond. They like it even better if you are off-topic for that forum.
Keep in mind that lack of evidence supporting your konspiracy theory actually _is_ evidence, of how effective the konspiracy is in hiding.
(06-Oct-05) When spanked, always retreat to the safety of the Ad Hominem.
(04-Aug-2005) When spanked mercilessly for days on end, proving with each poast just what an illiterate and ignorant fool you are, ALWAYS claim ownership of [person(s),froup(s)]. This works on so many levels. It inspires dread in your opponents that they will no longer be able to poast in their home froup and that they will eventually have to pay rent, to name just two.

Any problems with your poasts are the fault of the konspirators, who are trying to stop you from preventing the extinction of humanity.
Konspiracies that are able to subvert whole governments are always unable to silence konspiracy ko0ks.
The entire United States government is willing to spend millions of dollars for the sole purpose of harassing you.
Hollywood is making movies based on your personal life.
Do not consult psychiatrists or other mental health professionals. They are part of the konspiracy, and will sedate you and lock you away and keep you drugged if you tell them the truth.
Numerology and Astrology are respectable sciences and are useful for proving your case.
Everyone is Tim Hill, or David Green, or...
There is a fine line between trolling and kookery. Find that line and cross it repeatedly. When you are killfiled and/or LARTed for net.abuse as a result, claim victory. If you lose multiple accounts, this merely proves that you are indeed a world-class troll, with a black-belt in manipulation.
If you respond to every post someone else makes, they're obsessed. If they respond to less than 1% of your posts, they're even more obsessed.
Publishing people's real names, addresses, and phone numbers when there's no other way for you to come out of a flamewar with any dignity is cool, and proves that you are a master of secret internet information stores, and absolutely not to be fucked with.
Everyone is out to get you. You can put a stop to this by telling everyone that they're out to get you at every available opportunity.
You are the only sane one.
Those that give you a hard time about morally bankrupt things you yourself admit to are just persecutioners of the new inquisition.
Yelling in all caps and cursing at your detractors is debate. Your detractors laughing at you with sarcastic remarks is obvious anger and jealousy.
If doing something results in the loss of your account, legal hassles, or blunt trauma injury, do it again. It always works better the second time.
Asterisks, lots and lots of Asterisks.
Poking holes in kookscreed is stalking, and is a felony.
K00ks LOVE to "connect the dots". They are, of course, dots that only the k00k can see.
"They laughed at Einstein, too!"

Hello A.E. 352:

Your signal had very good audio quality, 5/9 no problem. That President Radio is working for you.

You where the only station in there at the time. Working on a new 20 Meter Antenna, I was listening in. Kind of neat to hear a little skip come in after its been so darn dead.

Then I start hearing the Carolinas, Georgia, and then Florida, Conditions moving around all right. Good to make contact with low power radios and such.

Best omni antenna was homemade. I had bought a 1/4 wl ground plane and had it up about 50 ft. I thought it was a good antenna until I was at my friends house and he had a 5/8 closer to the ground that worked beter than mine. I had seen a book at school that showed how to match a 5/8ths to coax usung a coax stub. A homemade 5/8ths was put together using the ground plane for parts. Antenna worked great for a few months and then it got really quiet. I found the coax stub had got saturated with water. Replaced the coax stub with an open wire stub and this worked well for a couple of more years until I had mechanical problems with the stub. At this time it got replaced with a coil wound on some acrylic rod that I had come by. Antenna is still in use today, well it was a year ago last Christmas, by the neighbor I gave it to in 1973. Nice thing about homemade antennas is they are easily repaired.

2169. Frankly...we don't care!

No one stole any ID. Being an idiot SHOULD be a crime. In that case, you'd be serving a life sentence.
